

DS430
.E46
v. 1

Weyrauch

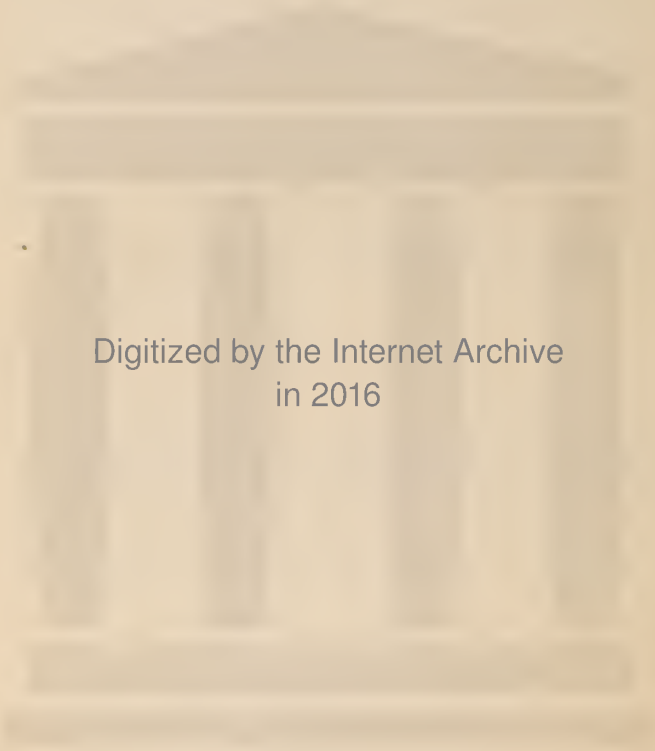

München 11. Apr.
1870

Dem Herrn Ludw. Christ.

SUPPLEMENTAL GLOSSARY

OF TERMS USED IN THE

NORTH WESTERN PROVINCES.

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2016

MEMOIRS

ON THE

HISTORY, FOLK-LORE, AND DISTRIBUTION

OF THE RACES

OF THE

NORTH WESTERN PROVINCES OF INDIA;

BEING AN AMPLIFIED EDITION OF THE ORIGINAL

SUPPLEMENTAL GLOSSARY OF INDIAN TERMS,

BY THE LATE

SIR HENRY M. ELLIOT, K.C.B.,

OF THE HON. EAST INDIA COMPANY'S BENGAL CIVIL SERVICE.

EDITED, REVISED, AND RE-ARRANGED

BY

JOHN BEAMES, M.R.A.S.,

BENGAL CIVIL SERVICE;

MEMBER OF THE GERMAN ORIENTAL SOCIETY, OF THE ASIATIC SOCIETIES OF PARIS AND BENGAL, AND OF THE PHILOLOGICAL SOCIETY OF LONDON.

IN TWO VOLUMES.

VOL. I.

LONDON:

TRÜBNER & CO., 8 AND 60, PATERNOSTER ROW.

MDCCCLXIX.

[All rights reserved.]

STEPHEN AUSTIN,

PRINTER, HERTFORD.

EDITOR'S PREFACE.

THIS work, the value of which has for more than twenty years been well-known and appreciated by all classes of Englishmen in India, as well as by Oriental scholars in Europe, is now given to the public in a form slightly different from that in which it first appeared. In previous editions the arrangement was strictly alphabetical, and the result was, in consequence, that it was difficult for the reader to find the subject of which he was in search. An article on some tribe or caste was followed by one on a totally different topic, and as some of the articles were extremely long, and there were no headings to the pages, such as are usually found in dictionaries, and no index, the task of finding any particular word was often a long and perplexing one. To remedy this defect in the form of the work, recourse has been had to the plan of dividing it into four parts, according to the subjects treated of. This four-fold division had, in fact, been already hinted at by the author in the Memorandum prefixed to the first edition. He modestly describes his book as “a few notices concerning the tribes, the customs, the fiscal and agricultural terms of this Presidency.”

First in order has been placed the valuable and elaborate series of essays on the Castes, their septs and families. Copious additions have been made to this section of the work, some of which are derived from pencil notes in the author's own handwriting, made on an interleaved copy which he kept for that purpose. Recourse has also been had to the valuable Report on the Archæology of India, by General Cunningham, to a volume of the late Professor H. H. Wilson's Glossary of Indian Terms, in which that illustrious Orientalist had made in manuscript considerable additions with a view to the improvement of future editions of his work, and to the published records of the Government of the North Western Provinces, which contain many reports on the revenue settlements of various districts, and, as a matter of course, much information about the castes and families holding land therein. A residence of ten years in India, during which I have been employed in several Provinces as a Magistrate and Collector, has enabled me to add a considerable amount of information derived from my personal experiences. While, however, every effort has been made to bring the work up to the level of the present time, and to make it a fair exposition of our present state of knowledge on this confessedly extensive and difficult subject, it cannot be denied that there is very much still to be done before we can be said to have exhausted the subject. The people of the North Western Provinces are unfortunately not safe guides in questions relating to their own past history; the excessive pride of the higher castes, and the ignorance and apathy of the lower, added to the extravagantly legendary character of much that is recorded in early Indian Annals, especially of the pre-Muhammadan times, combine to puzzle, and often, it may be feared, to disgust the enquirer.

It may be assumed that the Aryan nation entered India from the North West many centuries ago, in the twilight dawn of human history; that they found it already occupied by men of another race, whose bitter and persistent hatred to the invaders armed them with strength to dispute their progress inch by inch; and that they were in consequence then, and for many centuries afterwards, compact and homogeneous. When, however, the country had been won, and the sentiment of union was weakened by the removal of opposition from without, the tendency to elaborate a complex social organization so characteristic of the Aryan race in all its branches, European as well as Asiatic, developed itself into that exaggerated state of social disunion known by the name of caste. The principle of disintegration thus introduced extended itself with amazing rapidity, so that each petty sub-division or family erected itself into a separate caste, and the process went on till the people themselves forgot their own origin, and invented grotesque and often disgusting fables to account for the state of things they saw around them. It is not wonderful that such a state of things should have presented insurmountable difficulties to successive generations of foreigners from a distant country, where such distinctions were unknown.

The discovery of the Sanskrit language, and the marvellous development given to the study of Indian literature thereby, are events which rank high in the history of the triumphs of the human mind; but the absence of anything like connected or reliable history in those wonderful, poetical, religious, and philosophical masterpieces of the Brahmins, has rendered them well-nigh useless to persons engaged in the class of investigations to which the present work is devoted.

A few gleams of light are thrown upon the darkness by the memorable incident of Alexander's invasion, and by the travels of the Chinese pilgrims, Fah-Hian (400 A.D.) and Hiouen-Thsang (648 A.D.); coins, rock and pillar-inscriptions, grants engraved on copper, and other waifs and strays spared by the waves of time, have been industriously and successfully attacked, and made to yield their scanty stores of information to an acuteness and energy which reflect honour upon many English names, both dead and living. But the darkness is still great, and we have still to confess that history, in the true sense of the word, does not begin for India till the advent of the Musulman on the scene. Then, however, it was too late, at least for our present purpose. Indian society was fixed, wars and migrations had taken place, legends had sprung up, the work of disintegration had wrought its full results of evil.

That it may yet be given to European skill and perseverance to lift the veil,—to build up the perfect statue from the scattered fragments lying hidden under the rubbish of time,—must be the hope of all those who have the good of India at heart; and to such Sir H. Elliot's researches supply a basis and a starting-point, the value of which, incomplete though they necessarily are, cannot be too highly rated.

With regard to the other three parts of the present edition, it remains only to add, that every available source of information has been used, both for correction and for the filling up of gaps in the original. Much has been supplied from Sir H. Elliot's own notes, much from Professor Wilson's, and somewhat from my own.*

* If every European official in India would keep a note-book, and put down from time to time such little points worthy of notice as come before him in the course of his daily work, he would end by possessing a vast mass of highly valuable information, which otherwise would be lost to himself and the world.

It must be observed that it was very difficult to decide where to draw the line between these three divisions of the book. Native life in India is somewhat monotonous and colourless, and there is none of that eager enjoyment on festive occasions which is shewn by the peasantry of Southern Europe. Superstitions and rites have a dull practical aspect to the Indian ryot; their due observance secures him a full crop, and this, again, enables him to pay his rent and his money-lender. Festival days are useful, because on them he and his family can go to the mela, or fair, and lay in a small stock of household requisites; bathing in the Ganges, or making some small offering to this or that shrine, are merely incidents, and not always very prominent incidents, in the process. It results from the above conditions that there are many words in the peasant's language—a language which is the faithful reflector of his thoughts and feelings—which might be entered with equal justice under any one of these three Parts. His superstitions, his tools, and his rent are all mixed up in the ryot's mind so closely, that it is difficult to separate them. To take an instance: in measuring land there are a dozen superstitious practises, such as the dharm kotta, or biswa, which is measured by a bamboo of six cubits length, and in order to get a good average measurement, a man measures the first cubit from his elbow to the tip of his thumb, the next cubit to the tip of the forefinger, and so on, changing a finger at each cubit, and a special virtue is supposed to reside in a bamboo thus measured. Such a custom as this might, it is evident, be noticed equally well either under Part II. or Part III.

Again, the distinction between various sorts of soils is a matter which in some parts of the country has an effect upon the revenue, while in others it has none. This requires explanation. In those districts where the "permanent settlement" is in force, the Government of Lord Cornwallis in 1793 assigned certain lands, as absolute personal property, to certain persons, on the condition that they should pay a certain quarterly rent. It is obvious that in making such an arrangement as this, the first thing to do was to ascertain who was the person with whom the land should be settled; next, how much land he was to have; and thirdly, what the land was worth, and how much he ought to pay for it. That none of these three important points received proper attention, and that the second and third points were in many instances entirely overlooked, is an extraordinary fact, only to be accounted for by the small number of Englishmen then in the country, and by their ignorance of the matters they were dealing with. Some of the largest estates in Bengal and Behar were settled in perpetuity with persons whose right to them was more than doubtful, the boundaries of the estate were left totally undefined, and the amount of revenue to be paid settled upon a report made by a native assessor, who only visited a small part of the estate, and was bribed handsomely to assess it at a low rate. The capabilities of the land never having been taken into consideration by the rulers of the country, it often happens that we find an estate containing the richest and most productive of soils paying a low rent, and a poor estate paying a high rent. The results of this system fall on the ryot: in a lightly assessed estate, provided the landlord is tolerably just, he can get his land cheap, whereas a few miles off, in a highly assessed estate, he may have to pay double for worse land. The distinction between the different sorts of soil is, under these circumstances, valuable merely as a guide to the treatment which it requires, and not for revenue purposes.*

It is far different, however, in the other provinces, where a more enlightened system prevails. There the capabilities of the soil, and all other circumstances which are likely to influence the outturn of crops, are carefully weighed and enquired into by experienced English officers,

* As shewing the condition of the wretched ryot of the old provinces of Bengal, Behar, and Orissa, which are under the "permanent settlement," I may quote a good Bengálí proverb which I heard from the Rev. J. Long :

Zamíndárer bhali bháshá

Musulmánér murg'hí poshá.

"A zamíndár's kind word is like the Musulmán's feeding his fowls;" i.e., He feeds and cherishes them, in order to kill and eat them.

assisted by a large staff of trained native assistants ; the ryots themselves are consulted, their grievances listened to ; in short, every possible precaution is taken to secure a fair and equitable assessment, such as, while securing to the state its fair share of the profits, shall leave to the landlord and to the cultivator a fair return for their labour and outlay. In such a case the discrimination between the different sorts of soil becomes a revenue question, and may fairly be included in Part III.

It is necessary to mention these points, to explain the reason why some words are found in one Part, while others closely connected with them are placed in another ; it is hoped, however, that, with the aid of the Index, the reader will be able to find at once any word he may require.

Those who are familiar with the earlier editions will observe that considerable alterations have been made in those parts of the work in which comparisons were made between Indian and European rites and superstitions. It has been thought better to omit all such allusions as foreign to the purely Indian character of the work, as well as many etymologies, which were probably hardly seriously believed in by the author himself, and could not be fairly reproduced after so long an interval of time, though when first penned they may have had a certain appropriateness as the lighter fancies of a refined and elegant scholar.

I am compelled also, in fairness to myself, to explain that the work was entrusted to me only in November, and being obliged to return to my duties in India in the middle of February, the time at my disposal has been hardly sufficient for the task. I have had to forego many inquiries which would have cleared up obscure passages and thrown light on uncertain points, because they would have taken more time than I could afford. Had I been able to devote six months to them, a better result might have been achieved.

In conclusion, my thanks are due, in the first place, to the distinguished Oriental savant and numismatist, Mr. Edward Thomas, under whose auspices the work has been executed, and by whose judgment I have been guided, as well as directed throughout: to my learned friend, Dr. Reinhold Rost, Secretary of the Royal Asiatic Society, for his ever-ready assistance and hearty co-operation at every stage; and to several other kind friends, whose names I need not here mention.

Mr. Stephen Austin's well-known printing establishment has also, under considerable difficulties, done its part well, and maintained its ancient reputation for beauty of type and excellence of workmanship.

JOHN BEAMES.

RICHMOND,
January, 1869.

PREFACES TO ORIGINAL EDITION.

MEMORANDUM.

As several months have elapsed since the receipt of the first Parts of the Glossary of Indian Terms, no further delay should occur in returning them to Government, under the Orders dated 14th December, 1842, No. 913.

The Board will regret to observe that the call for further information has not been responded to, except to a very limited extent, by any of the Officers under their control. Being therefore apprehensive that the Honorable Court of Directors, who have shown so much anxiety to prepare a comprehensive Glossary, may feel some disappointment at receiving no additions or suggestions from these Provinces, I have ventured to put together a few notices respecting the tribes, the customs, the fiscal and agricultural terms of this Presidency, in the hope that if they are found to convey any information not hitherto recorded, they may be deemed worthy of being incorporated with the work which is about to be compiled under the superintendence of Professor H. H. Wilson.

I have confined my attention chiefly to the words included under these four heads, though I observe from entries in the printed specimens, that if the scheme of the Glossary is fully carried out, it will include terms of Hindoo Mythology and Astronomy, an account of the principal Festivals, and much which will, perhaps, have to be excluded on a revision. I have not attempted to meddle with such subjects, on which there are several books which contain ample information; and even in such departments as I have undertaken, I have endeavoured for the most part to avoid words which may be found in the common Dictionaries. For a few terms I have been indebted to the Revenue Glossaries furnished to the Sudder Board in A.D. 1839; but I believe the extent of my obligations is confined to those of Saugor and Goruckpoor. It has been part of my plan to introduce articles on the old, and locally known territorial Divisions of the Country, as a subject not only highly interesting in itself, but as being intimately connected with the fiscal portion of the work. Indeed, such articles as Desh, Furingistan, Futtehpoor, etc. etc., in the Printed Glossary, show that the admission of such words is in conformity with the views of the Court.

The ethnological remarks I have tried to curtail as much as possible; but, with all my efforts, I fear that many notices will be considered very tedious. As some excuse, however, it may be mentioned that we are still almost as ignorant of the agricultural classes of these Provinces as we were on the first day of our occupation, and that even their names are entirely omitted from the Printed Glossary, though the tribes of the Deccan, Guzerat, and other Provinces are not only copiously noticed, but we are referred to an Appendix for fuller information respecting them. The Maps which have been added in illustration of this part of the subject will, I trust, be found of interest. Their preparation has been attended with considerable difficulty, but no pains have been spared to make them as correct as circumstances would admit.

I have not, except in very few instances, pointed out the mistakes in the Glossary itself; for the errors, both of orthography and statement, are so obvious, that they cannot escape the notice of the compiler. As for my own orthography, I do not profess to be satisfied with it, since most of the words have been taken from oral information; and as they have perhaps never yet been written, and their pronunciation is by no means fixed, the liability to error is very great. In writing them I have endeavored, as far as possible, to conform to the system of Gilchrist—or rather that modification of it in use in our Revenue Surveys—which certainly has the merit of enabling an Englishman to pronounce a word in such a manner as to make it easily comprehended by the natives of Hindoostan. Sir W. Jones' method is better suited to the learned; but since it is becoming of more general use, as our books and translations multiply, I have added a column for its admission; as far, at least, as respects the vowel system.

As my attempts to illustrate the barren themes which occupy these pages take up much time, and as they may, after all, be considered of no value, I shall for the present conclude with the letter J (to which the specimen last received extends); and shall be guided respecting the continuation of the work by the opinion which the compiler may be pleased to express of this first portion of my labours. If he judge of its merits by the extent of his own information on all the subjects discussed in it, he may be disposed to think that my time might have been more profitably employed. Even my own partiality cannot conceal from me that there is in this Supplement much worthless matter, which ought not to have been admitted; but as the revision would occupy nearly as much time as the original composition, I prefer allowing my notes to remain in their present shape, in the full persuasion that the Honorable Court will overlook all minor defects, in consideration of my earnest endeavours to fulfil their desires.

H. M. ELLIOT,
SECRETARY.

SUDDER BOARD OF REVENUE,
The 1st February, 1844.

From

THE SUDDER BOARD OF REVENUE, N.W.P.,

To

THE SECRETARY TO THE GOVERNMENT, N.W.P.

No. 75 A. OF 1844.

Dated 9th Feb., 1844.

SIR,—With reference to the Order of the Government of India, No. 913 of 1842, dated 14th December, such portions of the Glossary of Indian Terms, then and subsequently received in this Department, as have undergone consideration and amendment, are herewith returned to be laid before the Honorable the Lieut.-Governor.

2.—The Sudder Board have great satisfaction in forwarding to the Government, for submission to the Honorable the Court of Directors, the accompanying Supplemental Glossary, prepared in accordance with the expressed wishes of the Honorable Court by Mr. H. M. Elliot, the Secretary to the Sudder Board, N. W. Provinces.

3.—The Board have perused this Supplemental Glossary with feelings of very great interest and satisfaction, and are persuaded it will be found to contain, so far as the limits allow, nearly all, if not all, the terms of known acceptance in the North Western Provinces, relating to the Revenue and Agricultural concerns of the country;—which, together with the very excellent commentary on the various tribes coming within the assigned limits, cannot but be regarded as a highly valuable addition to the original Glossary.

4.—Adverting to the great ability and research which have been displayed in the performance of so considerable a portion of the work, the Board beg to express an earnest request that Mr. Elliot may receive such notice from the Government and the Honorable the Court of Directors as will encourage him to bring the work to an early completion.

We have the honor to be, etc.,

(Signed)

T. J. TURNER,

H. S. BOULDERSON.

SUDDER BOARD OF REVENUE, N.W.P.

Extract G. O., No. 450, dated 11th May, 1844, in reply to a letter from the Sudder Board of Revenue, N.W.P., No. 75A., dated 9th February, 1844.

The Lieut.-Governor [Mr. Thomason] has perused this interesting Volume with much gratification, and is very desirous that the curious matter it contains should not be exposed to the risk of loss from the existence of a single copy, or to perversion from the ignorance of transcribers. His Honor, therefore, requests the Board will take measures for having it printed at once under the immediate eye of their Secretary.

NOTICE FOR THE BINDER.

The Map of the N.W. P., shewing the occupation of the Brahmanical Tribes, is to face Vol. I. p. 149.

The three larger Maps belong to Vol. II. p. 203.

Indian Implements, to face Vol. II. p. 287.

The Indian Plough, to face Vol. II. p. 342.

SUPPLEMENTAL GLOSSARY

OF TERMS USED IN THE

NORTH WESTERN PROVINCES.

PART I.

CASTES AND THEIR SUB-DIVISIONS.

[Under this head I have included all those articles of the original work which described any of the castes or sub-divisions of castes in the North Western Provinces, together with such additional notices of my own as seemed necessary to complete the subject. It will be understood that only those castes are mentioned which are found in these Provinces, and in the case of castes which live partly in and partly out of the North West, the original articles only refer to that portion which resides in the N. W. P. Those articles which I have added include some of the castes in Behar.—B.]

Agarwálá,

اگر والا

अगरवाला

A large sub-division of the merchant caste, comprising some of the wealthiest men in India. They derive their name from Agroha, on the borders of Hariána, which was the original seat of the tribe, and from which they emigrated to all parts of India, after the capture of that place by Shahábu'ddín Ghorí.— See Gogá Pír.

Agastwár, اگستوار अगस्तवार

Is the name of a small clan of Rajpúts in Havelí Benares.

Ahír,* اهير अहीर

The origin of this tribe, as given in the printed Glossary, cannot be correct; for Kúp (properly Gop) signifies merely the occupation of a herdsman.—Wilson's Sanskrit Dict., p. 299, 2nd Ed. Manu (X. 15) says that they are descended from a Brahman by an Ambasthá woman, i.e. one of the Baid, or Physician tribe. In the Brahma Purána it is said that they are descended from a Kshatriya father and a woman of the Vaisya caste; but on the question of the descent of the different tribes, the sacred books, as in many other matters, differ very much from each other, and none are to be implicitly trusted.

This pastoral tribe of the Yadubansí stock was formerly of much greater consideration in India than it is at present. In the "Ramáyana" and "Mahábhárat" the Abhíras in the West are spoken of; and in the Puranic Geography the country on the Western coast of India, from the Tapti to Devagarh, is called Abhira, or the region of Cowherds. When the Káttís arrived in Guzerat, in the eighth century, they found the greater part of the country in possession of the Ahírs. The name of Asírgarh, which Ferishta and the "Khazána Amira" say is derived from Asa Ahír, shows that the tribe was of some importance in the Dekkan also, and there is no doubt that we have trace of the name in the Abiria of Ptolemy, which he places above

* References on this subject are: J.R.A.S. xiii. 141. J.A.S.B. ix. 478, 484, 756, 885. Bombay L. T. i. 287. Lassen, Alterthumsk. i. 539. J.R.A.S. i. 248. Tod's Western India, pp. 358, 421. E. add.

Patalene. Ahírs were also at one time Rajas of Nepal at the beginning of our era, and they are perhaps connected with the Pála, or shepherd, dynasty, which ruled in Bengal from the ninth to the latter part of the eleventh century, and which, if we may put trust in monumental inscriptions, were for some time the universal monarchs of India.—(As. Researches, Vol. ix., p. 438.)

In the North Western Provinces Ahírs are scattered over various Parganahs. We find them in great numbers in the southern parts of the Dehli territory, from Rewárí, on the borders of Mewát, to the Bikanír frontier, in a tract of country known under the name of Bígphoto, q.v. A dense population of Ahírs (Tíklewala) will also be found in a line extending from the Kála Nadí in the neighbourhood of Marehrah, to near Bíbameyú on the Jumna (see Atábú); and from Salempúr Majhauíl in Gorakhpúr to Singraulí in Mirzapúr. Indeed, the Parganah of Ahrorah in the latter district, though now without Ahír Zamíndárs, derives its name from them, being called Ahírwara in ancient records. The only districts which in the “Aín Akbarí” are said to have Ahír Zamíndárs are Nagína and Sirdhána.

The Ahírs of these Provinces all trace their origin to Mathurá, or places a little to the West of it. There appear to be three grand divisions amongst them:—the Nandbans, the Jadubans, and Gwálbans (see Gwál)—which acknowledge no connexion, except that of being all Ahírs. Those of the Central Doáb usually style themselves Nandbans; those to the West of the Jumna and the Upper Doáb, Jadubans; and those in the Lower Doáb and Benares, Gwálbans. The latter seem to have no subdivisions, or Gots. The principal Gots of the Nandbans are, Samarphallá, Kishnaut, Bhagτά, Bilehnia, Diswár, Nagowa, Kanaudha, Dúnr, Ráwat, Tengúrea, Kor,* Kamaria, Barausia,

* Kor or Kur are held to be inferior to the rest of the caste.—See Rec. N. W. P. iv. 137. E. add.

Mújwár, Dahima, Nirbán, Kharkarí, Dirhor, Sítolia, Jarwaria, Barothí, Gonda and Phátak; amounting in all to eighty-four. In Bíghoto, besides many of these, there are the Molak, Sántoria, Khosia, Khallia, Loníwal, Aphariya or Aphiriya, Mailá, Mhailá, Khoro, Sesotia, Gandwál, Gird, Bhámsará, Jánjaria, Kánkauriá, and Nigániá; amounting in all to sixty-four. Many of the two last-named clans have been converted to the Mahometan faith, and are known as Rángars.* The two villages whence they

* This term is more strictly confined to Rajpúts who have been converted to Mahometanism; but there are several tracts in Dehli, particularly in the district of Rohtak, where the term is indiscriminately applied to Rajpúts, whether Mahometan or Hindú.

The origin of the term is very doubtful, and those who have attempted its etymology are by no means agreed among themselves.

Tod ("Asiatic Journal," Feb. 1838, p. 107) says, that "Rangri, or Rangra, is an epithet applied to all Rajpút chieftains; from Ringa (in the dialects) signifying a field of battle."

The Enc. Metropol. (Art. "Dehli") says, "Rangars, i.e. turncoats, are Mahomedan renegades from the Hindu faith."

Mr. H. T. Prinsep, in a note to p. 443 of his "Life of Amír Khan," says, "Rangras are the lower classes bordering on the Western Desert. They are all thieves and robbers, and mostly Musulmans." He does not attempt the origin of the name.

Francklin, at p. 275 of his "Memoirs of G. Thomas," says, "Rangurs are Mahomedan Rajpúts," and suggests, like the Enc. Metr., that the word implies coloured, or stained, or of mixed blood.

Sir J. Malcolm ("Central India," ii. 123) says, "that all the Brahmans of Central India, except those who came from the Dekkan, are classed by the Mahratta conquerors as Rangrí, or barbarous." At vol. ii. p. 191, he says, "the language taught in Central India is a dialect of the Hindui, termed Rangrí, which prevails from Bundelkhand to the Indus." Again, at p. 304, he observes, "the Rajpúts say the word is derived from Ran, signifying battle, and Garh, a fort, an epithet asserted to have been given them by one of the Kings of Dehli expressive of their bravery, but the Mahrattas say, that the derivation is from Ran, a forest, and Gurrí, a barbarian."

The probabilities are in favour of the Sanskrit रण, ran, battle—so that Rangur would mean "a warrior."—E. In the Marathi dictionary of Molesworth it is said "रांगडा is applied freely in abuse of persons or speech judged to be rude and uncouth."—B.

derive their name are celebrated in local legends for turbulence and contumacy.*

दिहली तें पैतीस कोस कांहौर निगाना
अपनी बोई आप खाएं हाकिम ने † न दें दाना

“Thirty-five kos from Dehli is Kánhaur Nigáná ; What they sow, they themselves eat, they do not give the grain to the ruler.”

Amongst these, the Khoro rank first ; but their claim to superiority is denied by the Aphiriya, who have certainly in modern times attained the highest distinction. They all, including the Khoro, intermarry on terms of equality, avoiding, like all other Ahírs, only the four Gots nearest related. A man, for instance, cannot marry into his father's, mother's, paternal, or maternal grandmother's Got ; and no intermarriages take place between distant clans. Thus, those of the Doáb and Bighoto hold little or no personal intercourse, and each declares the other an inferior stock.

Ahírs conform to the customs of Gújars and Játs in respect to the marriage of elder brothers' widows, wherever they are much intermixed, as in the Dehli territory ; but the Ahírs of the Central Doáb forswear all connexion with those tribes, which they consider of an inferior grade ; but as each of these tribes, as well as the Ahar, q.v., claims the superiority, it is not easy to settle their comparative rank, and the difficulty is increased, with regard to the latter, by the close similarity of

* This is the account they themselves give of their origin, but as Kánhaur and Nigáná are occupied by Powar Rangars, and Kan-k-auria can scarcely be derived from Kan-h-aur, I do not place much confidence in their assertion. Popular legends, however, are not easily disproved.

† This ने is not the sign of the instrumental, but a local mark of the dative which is used in several other dialects, as, for instance, in Nepalese, under the form लई or लै for the same case.—B.

name. In the Dehli territory, the Ahírs eat, drink, and smoke, in common, not only with Játs and Gújars, but also, under a few restrictions, with Rajpúts.* In other places, Rajpúts would indignantly repudiate all connection with Ahírs.

Besides the families above-mentioned, names are also given according to the place of residence. Thus we have the Dhúndarí of Mewar; the Hariániya of Hariána; the Púrbí, of the Eastward; the Birjia, of Brij; the Kohkohí of the Bindáchal Hills; and the Panjábí of Lahore.

Aheriyá, اهيريا अहेरिया

A fowler, a sportsman.—See Dhánúk.

Ahar, अहर अहर

Ahars are found on the banks of the Ramgangá, and in Sambhal, Rajpúra, Asadpúr, Ujhání, and Saheswán, and some other Parganahs in Rohilkhand, West of that river. These tracts, indeed, are known familiarly under the name Aharát. They are also found in great numbers in Faizpúr Badaria, and the country in the neighbourhood, between the Ganges and Búdh Gangá. They have huḷḷa paní (smoke and drink) in common with Játs and Gújars, but disclaim all connexion with Ahírs, whom they consider an inferior stock; and the Ahírs repay the compliment. Ahars say they are descended from Jadonbansí (Yadu) Rajpúts; but Ahírs say that they themselves are the real Jadonbansí, being descended in a direct line from Krishna, and that Ahars are descended from the cowherds in the service of that illustrious Avatar, and that the inferiority

* In some of the eastern districts Brahmans will take milk, water, and even food from certain castes of Ahírs, such as the Baiswaría Gwálás. They explain this by saying that the Gwálás are purified by attending on that sacred animal, the cow, but it is possible that the alleged origin of the Ahírs from a Brahman father may have something to do with it.—B.

of Ahars is fully proved by their eating fish and milking cows. From the slight difference in the pronunciation of the two names, it is very difficult to ascertain what are the distinctive features in the two tribes. They are almost universally confounded by other classes, and very often disagree in the accounts of their own genealogies. Some of the most noted tribes of the Ahars in the N. West are Bhattí, Nagáwat, Naugorí, Rúkar, Básián, Ora, Bukiáin, Diswár, Bhúsiáin, and Birraria.—See Ahír.

Álíyá, آلیا आलीया

A branch of the Turkia subdivision of Banjáras.—See Banjára.

Amethiyá, امیثیا अमेठिया

A tribe of Chauhán Rajpúts of the Bandhalgotí sub-division, of whom a few have settled in Salempúr Majhaulí, in the district of Gorakhpúr. They came from Amethí in Oudh.

Ansárí, انصاري अनसारी

A tribe of Shaikhs who now are found chiefly in the Saháranpúr district, Kíratpúr in Bijnor, and the Benares province. They are represented by Abú 'l Fazl as being the proprietors of Sayyidpúr Bhitrí and Chanár in Akbar's time.

They profess themselves to be descendants of the citizens of Medina, who gave the prophet an asylum against his enemies when he fled from Mecca; hence called Ansárí انصاري auxiliaries. They appear to have come to this country from Herat in the time of Fíroz Shah.—See the "Mirát-i-Jahán," which was compiled from the papers of Mahomed Baqa, an Ansárí.

Pocock ("Specimen Hist. Arab." p. 42) says, they are of the tribe of Azd and the family of Khazraj. "الخزرج" Alkhazraj; Yathrebi (scil. Medinæ) incolæ qui الانصار al Ansar, Ansarii, scilicet Mahommediæ profugi adjutores, dicti"—deriving his information from Abulfeda.—See p. 473 of White's edition.

الخزرج اهل يشرب المسلمون منهم هم الانصار

It seems, however, more usual among Oriental writers of early Mahometan history to call the inhabitants of Medina generally, Ansári.*

Áolániyá, آولانیا आओलानिया

A tribe of Játs holding about forty villages in Pánípat Bángar, so called from the name of their village in that neighbourhood. They are in reality Gatwáras. Though they are Hindús, they claim the title of Malik, which they say was bestowed upon them by some king as a token of their superiority to their brethren.

Aphariyá, اپھریا अफरिया

See Ahír, of which tribe they form a sub-division.

Áúdi, هُودي or آودي आऊदी or हूदी

A tribe of Játs, proprietors of about twenty villages in Pánípat Bángar, and twenty in Sonípat Bángar. They are called indiscriminately Áúdí and Húdí, with perhaps a leaning in favor of the latter pronunciation.

Awasthí, اوستھی अवस्थी

One of the sub-divisions of Kanaujiyá Brahmans, q.v.

Báchhal, باحیل बाहल

A tribe of Rajpúts of the Sombansí stock. We find them in

* Dabistan, i. 20, iii. 27. The question is not an Indian one.

Jalálí of Aligarh; Kot Sálbáhan, Ujhání, and Nidhpúr of Badaon; Sahár and Aríng of Mathurá; and in Tilhar and Shah-jahánpúr. They are recorded in the “Aín Akbarí” as being the Zamíndárs of Farída and of Kánt Gola, the old name of Shah-jahánpúr; and the fact is interesting, as showing the changes of possession which have occurred in this tract within a short space of time. The Báchhal Rajpúts are said to have succeeded the Goelas or Gújars. They were in turn succeeded by Katherya Rajpúts, who themselves have been of late years succeeded by the Gaur Rajpúts, whom they called in as allies to aid them against the encroachments of the Rohillas.

Bágrí,

باگري बाग्री

A tribe inhabiting the Bágar country, a tract between the South-western border of Hariána and the Ghára, who appear at one time to have been of great consideration, as we find a Bágrí Ráo mentioned by Chand Bardái as accompanying Pirthí Rájá. They seem to have been originally Rajpúts, but are now held to be an inferior tribe, and are usually denominated Játs. Tod considers the Bágrís to be one of the aboriginal races of India, but he does not mention which Bágrís; and the term is so extensively applied, that any reference to them, without mentioning their locality, is very indefinite. There is an extensive clan of Bágrí Brahmans, and the name enters into the subdivisions of several other castes.—(See Jádón.)

Bágar is also the name of a large tract of country in Malwa,*

* “Among the tribes settled in Central India, who are professed robbers and thieves, the two principal are Baugries and Moghies, both Hindús of the lowest caste. They came originally from the Western parts of India, chiefly from the neighbourhood of Chittore. The Moghies can hardly be said to have passed the Chumbul, but the Baugries have settled in the Eastern parts of Malwa in considerable numbers.”—Malcolm’s “Central India,” II. p. 182.

Probably Bágrís and Magahyas.—B. “A range of rocky hills intersects nearly the whole of Shekhawati in a N. E. direction and close upon its E. frontier. The country the inhabitants of which are called Bágri; but in the North Western Provinces we rarely hear the word used except as applicable to the Bágri Játs of Hissar and Bhattiána.

Bájpái, باج پائي वाजपाई

See Kanaujia Brahman, of which tribe they are a sub-division. They are also called वाजपेई in Behar.—B.

Báláín, بالاین बालाईन

A large sub-division of the Játs, q.v.

Báland, بالند बालंद

A tribe which was formerly predominant in Agorí Barhar and the Southern parts of Mirzapúr, whence they were expelled by the Chandel Rajpúts. They retired to Manwás, where they retain a principality in subordination to the Raja of Rewa. They are said still to remember with fondness their former possessions in Agorí Barhar, and declare they will not bind on their turbans till their restoration to their ancestral rights is accomplished. It is not easy to say when this expulsion took place, but the immigration of Chandels to these parts appears to have occurred after the capture of Mahoba, some time previous to the defeat of Pirthí Rájá by Shahábu'ddín, towards the close of the 12th century.

It is sometimes said that Báland is merely the name of a Raja of the Kharwár tribe, but there seems more reason to suppose that it is the name of a distinct clan.

on the E. side of these hills is called Dhundar (a name which was formerly applied to a large portion of Rajputana), while that to the West is called Bágár, which includes nearly the whole of Shekhawati, and is generally applicable to the sandy country where water is only procurable at a great depth."—Boileau, MS. Journal. E. add.

Bándhalgotí, باندھلگوتی वांधलगोती

A tribe of Rajpúts of Chauhán descent, occupying part of Bundelkhand and Binaudha (which see). There are a few also in Havelí Ghazípúr. The name is frequently pronounced like Badhilgotí and Banjhilgotí.

Bárah sádát, باره سادات वारह सादात

A powerful tribe of Sayyids in the Eastern part of the Muzaffarnagar district. They hold a great portion of Parganahs Bhúkarherí, Bhúmá, Jánsath, Sambhalherí, Jaulí, and the Eastern parts of Parganahs Muzaffarnagar and Khataulí. A few colonies of them are occasionally found elsewhere, as in Amroha of Moradabad, and Sikandra of Allahabad; but their stronghold is the Muzaffarnagar district.

The origin of the name Bárah is ascribed to various sources; some say that, scandalized at the debaucheries of the Mína bazar of Dehli, which they considered unsuited to their sacred character, they obtained leave to reside outside (bahir) of the town—others that it was the chief town of twelve (bárah) which belonged to the clan: the spelling is opposed to the former derivation.*

There are four sub-divisions of the Bárah Sádát; the Tihan-púrí, whose chief town is Jánsath; the Chantraudí, whose chief town is Sambhalherí; the Kundalwál, whose chief town is Majhera; and the Jagnerí, who claim Bidaulí on the Jumna as their chief town. They assert that they have been located since the time of Mahmúd of Ghazni; but this is evidently false. There appears reason, however, to believe, from the collateral evidence afforded by the interesting history of the Bilgrám Sayyids, called the "Júnaidiyá," that their occupation dates as far back as the time of Shamsu'ddín Altamsh. Besides these divisions, they have private marks of recognition, which they say have been very successful in excluding impostors from the tribe. Particular families have denominations, such as dog, ass, sweeper, etc., which are derived from the menial offices which it is said some of the Sayyids of this family performed for the Emperor Humayún, when reduced to extremities during his flight from Sher Shah.

* I have always heard the derivation from باره twelve (which is sometimes written باره), but in E. add. it is mentioned that there is a place called Barhah. See article Budh Ganga in Part III. Sádát is the plural of Sayyid.—B. See Jehangir's Memoirs, p. 655, which is quoted by Barnes, Report on Bijnor, and confirms the derivation from bára, twelve.—E. add.

The improbability of men assuming such humiliating designations without a good cause, gives some colour to the story; particularly when we learn the devotion of the Emperor's attendants, which is so amusingly detailed by his right reverential Aftábchí, Jauhar, in the "Tazkiratu 'l vikáyá."

The Bárah Sádát must have obtained their highest stage of prosperity in the time of Farrukhsír; but we read in the Memoirs of Jehángír and in the Táríkh-i-Badáoní that members of this family attained distinction not only in his court but in that of his father. Thus, the Sayyid Mahomed, mentioned in the article Bhadauriá, Sayyid Ahmed Khan, and Sayyid Hashim, were all men of distinction in Akber's court. Jehángír particularly mentions Sayyid Ali Asaf, as the son of the Sayyid Mahomed above-mentioned, "one of the great Amírs of his father's court." And in the Padshahnámah we find mentioned among the Mansabdars of Shahjahán's time, Sayyid Khán Jahán, Bárah, Mansabdar of 5000: and Shuját Khan and Debí Khan, each of 4000. In Aurangzeb's reign they were not less conspicuous.

Farrukhsír being indebted for his elevation to the assistance afforded by Husain Ali Khan, Governor of Behar, and Abdullah Khan, Governor of Allahabad, two brothers of the Bárah stock, their influence continued unabated during his reign, as well as for some time subsequent; and it is probable that to this period must be ascribed the handsome and expensive structures, of which the ruins are now scattered over so extensive a tract of country in the Upper Doáb, from Mawána to Jaulí.

The Sayyids having gained themselves honor by the constancy with which they adhered to the Minister's family during its decline, and the courage they displayed on the hard fought field of Hasanpúr, where Abdullah Khan was defeated and slain. This adherence, however, proved their destruction. Full particulars will be found in the "Sairu 'l Mutakharín" and the "Taríkh-i Múzaffarí."

Bijheriya, بیجھیریا बीजेरिया

There are a few of this clan of Rajpúts in the district of Gorakhpúr.

Bais, بیس बैस

One of the thirty-six royal races of Rajpúts, giving name to the province of Baiswára, in Oudh, and not in the Doáb, as Colonel Tod (Rajasthan, i. 118) supposes. Baiswara lies between Cawnpore on the west, and the Saí river on the east; and between the Chúáb rivulet on the south, and Dikhtan (the country of the Dikhít Rajpúts) on the north.

There are several Bais Rajpúts in these provinces, but they are not found to the westward of Dubhaí in Bulandshahr. To the east of that Parganah they are found in greater number than any other clan of Rajpúts; particularly in Kot Sálváhan, Nidhpúr and Saheswan of Budáon; in Barwar of Mynpúrí; in Atraulí of Aligarh; in Thattia, and Saurak of Farrukhabad; in Dehlí Jakhan of Etawah; in Jájmau, Ghátampúr, Akbarpúr and Sarh Salempúr of Cawnpore; in Fattihpúr Haswa (Musulman), Hatgánw, Ekdalla, Ayiah Sáh, Muttaur (Musulman and Hindú), and Gházípúr, of Fattihpúr; in Kurra, Kewaí, and Bara of Allahabad; in Banda, Jalálpúr, Chebú, Maudha, Súmerapúr, and Hamírpúr, and many other Parganahs of Bundelkhand; in Sikandarpúr, Mahul, Bilhábars, Deogánw, and Chiryakot of Azimgarh; in Rattanpúr Bansí, Dhoriapár, Hasanpúr Magar, and Amorha of Gorakhpúr; in Khanpúr and Bahríabad of Gházípur; and in Singrámau, Rárí, Zafarábád, and Karákāṭ of Jaunpúr. There are also several in the neighbourhood of Farrakhabad, especially in Paramnagar, whose turbulence has long been notorious; and who in A.D. 1391 and 1392 created such disturbances, in concert with the Rahtors, that it was thought necessary to send out large bodies of imperial troops against them (Zíáu'ddín Barní).

All the Bais in our provinces state that they came from Dúndia Khera in Baiswara. Their accounts respecting the place, whence they emigrated to Dúndia Khera, do not coincide, but it is most usual for them to assert that they came from Múngí Paitun in the Dekkan. No other Rajpút tribe is represented to have come from that quarter. They state themselves to be of the same lineage as Sáliváhana, and he also is reported in ancient histories to have emigrated from Múngí Paitun to the banks of the Nerbudda, whence he expelled the famous Vikramáditya.*

The scale of the Bais in the rank of Rajpúts may be judged by their intermarriages, as is the case with all the Rajpút classes. The ordinary Bais of our provinces give their daughters in marriage, amongst others, to Sayngars, Bhadaurias, Chauháns, Kachwahas, Gautams, Parihárs, Dikhíts, and Gaharwars; and receive daughters in marriage from Banáphars, Jinwars, Khíchars, Ragbansís, Raikwars, and the Karcholí Gahlotes. But the Tilokchandí Bais, who reside in Dúndia Khera, and their near relations, such as those of Barwar, Dehlí Jakhan,

* Colonel Tod in one place calls Saliváhana a Takshak, and in another a Yadu Prince. He is also of opinion that the Bais are a sub-division of the Suryavansi Rajpúts, and gives them a place in his list of the royal tribes. Múngi Paitun is on the Godavery, and is probably the Pithiana of the Periplus.

and Kot Salbáhan, consider themselves far superior to all other Bais, and profess to give their daughters to none but the very highest tribes. There is reason to suppose that they practise female infanticide, at least in the Oudh territory. Those Tilokchandís, who reside in our provinces cannot make away so freely with their offspring, and have consequently consented more readily to intermarriages. Thus the Tilokchandís of Dumráñw, in Bhojpúr, give their daughters in marriage to the Harihobans of Ballía, in Gházípur, and those of Deogánw give theirs to Rájkumárs. Besides the Tilokchandí, there are said to be no less than three hundred and sixty subdivisions of Bais Rajpúts, the descendants of as many wives of Salivahana. Amongst the progeny of these “queens of a day,” the most noted in our provinces are the Tilsárí, Chak Bais, Nandwak, Bhanawag, Bach, Parsaria, Patsaria, Bijhonia, Khatbais, Bhatkaria, and Chanamia or Gargbans; but it may be doubted if all these are really Bais. (See these Articles, as well as Binaudha and Gautam.)

The Tilokchandí Bais of Dúndia Khera are subdivided into four clans of Ráo, Rája, Naihathá, and Sainbasí. These all profess to derive their rights from the Gautum Raja of Argal.

Baníwál, بنیوال वनीवाल

One of the subdivisions of the Bhangí caste, q.v.

Baresiní, بریسری वरेशिरी

A tribe of inferior Jadon Rajpúts in Fattihabad, and Sham-sabad of Agra.

Barkalá, برکلا वरकला

An inferior clan of Rajpúts, found in some of the Western and Central Parganahs of Bulandshahr.

Barothí, بروتهی वरोधी

A tribe of Ahírs in the neighbourhood of Paindhat, in the Mainpúrí district.—See Ahír.

Básián, باسیان वासियान

See Gaur Tagá and Ahír.

Bilúch, بلوچ बिलूच

A few Bilúch Zamíndárs are to be found in the Parganahs of Hodál, Bághpat, and Jiwar. A large Bilúch Jágír in the Dehli territory has encouraged their resort to these parts.

Beldár, بیلدار बेलदर

A class of Hindús engaged in digging with a Bel, or mattock. They are said in the Puranas to be descended from a Tayúr boatman and a woman of the Ahír tribe; but Beldárs are now rarely met with as a distinct caste, even if they ever were one, which may be doubted, as Beldár is a pure Persian word.

The Beldárs now met with are composed mostly of different inferior tribes—Káchhís, Kúrmís, Chamárs, and others, who follow the occupation of digging.*

Bhál, بیال भाल

A tribe of Rajpúts, proprietors of part of Sikandarabad in Bulandshahr, and Hatras and Tappal in Aligarh.

Bhálá sultán, بیالا سلطان भालासुलतान

A tribe of Rajpúts in Binaudhá, q.v. and Gorakhpúr. Both these tribes may be probably connected with the Balla, who are included in the Rajkula, and were the lords of Bhál in Saurashtra.

* Kols and Santháls, calling themselves dhángars (which I believe is a Kol word meaning day-labourers), are now chiefly employed in road-making and the like.—B.

The Bhál and Bhála Sultán are the same tribe, but the Bhál by intermarriages with inferior stocks are not held in the same consideration as the Bhála Sultán.*

Bhánd, بهاند भांड

Bahrúpiya, بهروپيا बहुरूपिया

The text of the Printed Glossary, under Bhánd, requires modification.

Bhánds are a separate clan from the Bahrúpiya, but are descended from them. Those also are called Bhánds who without reference to caste follow the occupation of singing, dancing, and assuming disguises. The Bhoí Sutr says that Bahrúpiyas spring from the intercourse of a Malláh, or boatman, with a widow of the Gangapútr tribe. Their name is derived from the Sanskrit बहु many, and रूप appearance—i.e., multiform, assuming many disguises; a mimic.

It is an error to suppose that Bhánd is written by mistake for Bhát. The two are quite distinct, so much so that Bhánds are frequently known by the name of Bhandela, which shows the distinction more plainly. Bhánds are now all Musulmans. Bahrúpiyas are many of them Musulmans, but the greater portion have adhered to their ancient faith.

Bhát, بهات भाट

Bhát is said in the Glossary to be one of the illegitimate tribes springing from the intercourse of a man of the Bais and a woman of the Kshatriya caste; so also says Wilson, roce मागध, as well as the Vocabulary to Johnson's "Selections from the Mahábhárat," p. 207 : but Bháts are usually considered to spring from the intercourse of a Kshatríya with a Brahman widow. Other authorities say that they were produced to amuse Párvati, from the drops of sweat on Siva's brow, but as they chose to sing his praises rather than her's, they were expelled from heaven, and condemned to live a wandering life, as terrestrial bards.—Sir John Malcolm, "Central India," Vol. II., p. 132, says : "According to the fable of their origin, Mahadeva first created Bháts to attend his lion and bull ; but the former killing the latter, every day gave him infinite vexation and trouble in creating new ones. He therefore formed the Cháran equally devout as the Bhát, but of bolder spirit, and gave him in charge these favorite animals. From that period no bull was ever destroyed by the lion."

* They have a tradition that their name means "spear-king," from bhald, "a spear." See "People of India," s.v.—B.

A Bhát is a genealogist, a family bard. By some tribes, the Bhát and Jága are considered synonymous ; but those who pretend to greater accuracy, distinguish them by calling the former Birmbhát, or Badí, and the latter Jágabhát. The former recite the deeds of ancestors at weddings and other festive occasions : the latter keep the family record, particularly of Rajpúts, and are entitled by right of succession to retain the office ; whereas the Birmbháts are hired and paid for the particular occasion. Jágabháts pay visits to their constituents every two or three years, and receive the perquisites to which they are entitled. After recording all the births which have taken place since their last tour, they are remunerated with rupees, cattle, or clothes, according to the ability of the registering party. Those of the North Western Rajpúts generally reside between the borders of Rajpútana and the Dehli territory. Many also live at Dáránagar on the Ganges, and travel to the remote East in order to collect their fees. Whereas the Birmbháts are residents in towns and Kasbas, and do not emigrate periodically.

Both of these classes are held in the same dread for their exactions ; which are satisfied by their constituents for fear of being lampooned and paraded in effigy (Gudda) before the other members of the family.

Several communities of Bháts exist in the North of Oudh, and a few are scattered over our provinces. There are, for instance, several villages belonging to Bháts in Azimgarh, Gorakhpúr, and Gházípur.

In Rohilkhand, the occupation of Bháts, as bards, is frequently usurped by Gaur Brahmans.

There are several sub-divisions among the Bháts of these Provinces, and an attempt is sometimes made, as with many other classes, to reduce them to the definite number of seven; viz., Atsela, Mahapátr, Kailea, Mainpúríwala, Jangira, Bhatará and Dasaundhí. But there are several which are not included under these heads, as Chaurásí, Gajbhim, Chúngele, Gújriwala, Síkatpúrea, Nagaurí, Baruá, etc., which shews that the classification into seven is not correct.

Steel, in his "Summary of Indian Classes," p. 108, divides Bháts into Bhát Rajpút, or Kaví, and Bhát Kúnbí; the former he says are in Hindústán, the latter in the Maráṭha country; but the difference, if any, between them, refers perhaps more to the tribes they serve, than to any family distinction amongst themselves.

Of Bháts, several have been converted to the Muhammadan religion; some are said to have become Musulmans as early as the time of Shahábu'ddín Ghorí, when they received the title of Raís.

Besides their employment as genealogists, it is, or rather was, considered their special duty to learn the Puránas, for which, it is needless to say, they are now no longer conspicuous. (Padma Purána. See "Journal of R. A. S.," No. V. 281.)

Bhíhar,

بیهار भीहर

This is the name of a tribe which, according to local tradition, appears to have been one of the aboriginal races of Rohilkhand and the Upper Doáb. They are said to have been expelled from Niraulí, Bahjoí, and the neighbouring districts by the Badgújar Rajpúts. In the Doáb they are more commonly called Bemhar, and in parts of Rohilkhand, B́ihar. There may have been some connection between them and the Bhars, q.v.

Bhuksá,

بھکسا भुक्सा

A tribe found inhabiting the forest under the hills from Púrānpúr Sabna, on the Sarda, to Chandpúr, on the Ganges.

Bhuksas claim to be Powar Rajpúts, and assert that their chief, Udyájít, was driven from house and home in a quarrel he had with his brother Jagat Ráo, the Rájá of Dháránagar, and came to dwell with a few dependants in Banbasá, a village in the Oudh territory. He had not been there long before his aid was solicited by the Raja of Kamáon, whose territories required defence against the invasion of some neighbouring potentate. Success attended the efforts of the Powar, and the gratitude of the Raja induced him to offer his defenders an asylum in his territories. Upon this they are represented to have left Banbasa, and to have taken up their residence in their present abodes under the hills, chiefly on the lower edge of the Bhábar, where the springs rise to the surface. A part of the tribe remained in attendance upon the Raja of Kamáon.*

* It may be proper to remark that there may possibly have been some connection between the Powars and Bhuksas; for Chand, the Bard, records that Ram, the Powar, or Pramár, bestowed Kattair upon Kehar; which shows that this province must once have been included within the dominions of the Chakwa lord of Ujjayin. It may also be added that an Udyájít, or Udyádít, Pramár, son of Bhoj, was Raja of Dhár in the first half of the eleventh century, as has been established by numerous inscriptions (Trans. R. A. S., Vol. I. 133), and that the Bhojpúr family of Sháhábád claim a similar descent. They differ, however, in saying that Jagat Deo was the son, not the brother, of Udyájít. Rana Deo, the brother of Jagat Deo, was the founder of the Bhojpúr family.

This close identity in the relation of the origin of two such distant tribes, which Bhuksas are considered bad cultivators, and rarely remain in the same spot above two years, for by that time they generally contrive to exhaust the soil they have had under tillage.—See “Printed Reports on Rohilkhand Canals,” p. 107.

Of Bhuksas there are fifteen different Gots, or Clans—twelve superior, and three inferior. The superior are Baḍgújar, Taábri, Barhanái, Jalwar, Adhoí, Dugugia, Rathor, Negauria, Jalál, Upadhya, Chauhán and Dúnwaria. The three inferior are the Dímar Rathor descended from a Teli (oil-presser); Dhangra from a hill-woman; and Golí from a woman of the barber caste. The names of these tribes indicate considerable intermixture with other classes, both Rajpút and Brahman.

Bhuksas are prohibited marrying in their own Gots, but may select any other Got they choose. Those who reside in Kilpúrí and Sabna are said occasionally to intermarry with the Thárús.

The Bháts of the Bhuksas, who are descended from a follower of Udyájít, reside still at Banbasá, and pay occasional visits to their constituents.

The Parohits of the Bhuksas are Kanaujiyá Brahmans, who are also descended from one of the companions of Udyájít.*

Bhúínhár,

بیوینہار

भूँहार

A tribe of Hindús to be found in great numbers in Gorakh-púr, Azimgarh, and the province of Benares. The Maharaja could have had no communication with each other for centuries, is rather favorable to the claims of the Bhuksas, and leads us to suspect that their name may possibly have originally had some connection with that of their great progenitor Raja Bhoj.

* A long and interesting article on the Bhuksas or Boksas will be found in the J. A. S. B. 1865, Part II. pp. 147-173, by Dr. J. L. Stewart. It is too long to quote here, but the whole description of the race tends to prove their aboriginal character. They are probably of the same class as the Thárús who occupy the Tarái to the eastward of them as far as the Bágmati River, and like them they are not affected by malaria.—B.

of Benares is of this caste. They call themselves sometimes Brahmans, sometimes Thakúrs. They were originally Brahmans of the Sarwaria stock; but from having, as they say, received the Parganah of Kaswár from Raja Banár, and become addicted to agricultural pursuits and cultivators of land (भूईं), they lost their rank as Brahmans, though they frequently receive marks of respect due only to that privileged class. Others say that when Parasuráma destroyed all the Kshatriyas, he introduced Brahmans to occupy their place, and hence they became proprietors of land.

We, perhaps, have some indications of the true origin of Bhúínhár in the names Gargabhumi and Vatsabhumi, who are mentioned in the Harivansa, as Kshatriya Brahmans, descendants of Kasya princes (p. 123). Their name of Bhumi, and residence at Kasí, are much in favour of this view; moreover, there are to this day Garga and Vatsa Gots, or Gotras, amongst the Sarwaria Brahmans; but Wilson seems disposed to give another meaning to the title ("Vishnu Purána," p. 410).

Bhúínhárs are congregated chiefly in Deogánw of Azimgarh; in Gorakhpúr; in Doabeh, and Saidpúr Bhitri of Gházípúr; and in Majháwar, Mehwári, Sheopúr, Narwan, Kol Asla, Dhús, and Kaswar of Benares; also in Majhowa, Simránw and Mehsí of Champáran, in Bahár.

Besides the Garga, and Vatsa Gots, there are several subdivisions of Bhúínhárs, such as Sandel, Gautam (of which family is the Benares Maharaja), Dichhit, Upadhya, Pandé, Sankarwár, Kinwár. It will be observed that several of these are subdivisions of the Sarwaria Brahmans, and those whose origin is disguised by new names have all some title connecting them with the Sarwaria stock. Thus, the Sankarwar are Misr, the Donwar, Tewári; and so on.

In their marriages they do not observe the same distinctions which are enforced among Sarwarias between the Gautam Garg, Sandel, and the inferior ranks; for all the Bhúínhárs intermarry on terms of equality. See Kanaujiya Brahmans and Sarwaria Brahmans.

* * To the above remarks of Sir H. Elliot, I add the following notice, derived from personal reminiscences of my residence in Champáran. This caste is widely spread all over Northern Behar, Benares, and Gorakhpúr; and less frequent in Southern Behar. They call themselves Brahmans, but this statement is not admitted by other castes. The story mentioned in the text that they lost caste by taking to agriculture is incredible on the face of it, as there are many thousands of Brahmans in the same part of the country who are engaged in agricultural pursuits, but without losing caste; such as Tiwáris, Upadhyas, Ojhás or Jhás, and others. The popular account of their origin is that they are partly Rajpúts and partly of other castes, and that on some occasion a king—who some say was Janaka, others Ram, and others one or other of the old legendary heroes—being desirous of performing a sacrifice, part of which consisted in feeding a thousand Brahmans, was unable to find so many in all Mithili (Tirhút and Northern Behar). He therefore privately, the day before the feast, distributed Brahman's janeus, or sacrificial threads to all sorts of people of the inferior castes, and the next day had them assembled and fed together with the few Brahmans who were present. From that day they ranked as an inferior caste of Brahmans, and were called Bhúínhárs because they were the ordinary "people of the land" (भूईं, i.e. भूमि, land, and हार, i.e. वाला person). The Maharaja of Bettiah, in Champáran, is of this caste, as are also the Raja of Sheohar, the Ráj Kumár Bábú of Madhoban, and several minor zamíndárs in the same district. They are connected by marriage with the Maharaja of Benares, and with many other influential landholders in Sáran and Gorakhpúr. They do not have "hukka pani" (drinking and smoking) with Brahmans, and only under some restrictions with Rajpúts. Thus, a Rajpút may eat rice with them only when it is without condiments; he may not eat bread; and he may drink water only from an earthen vessel, not from a brass lotah. Similarly, when he eats with them, his food must be placed on a dish made of leaves, and not on the usual brass tháli. The meaning of these apparently trifling distinctions is that the Rajpút, on an emergency, may eat hastily prepared food with them, but nothing that implies a long preparation or deliberate intention.

Bhúínhárs are also called Bábhan बाभन or बाह्यन, by which the people say is meant a sham Brahman; just as in some districts an inferior Rajpút is called a राउत Raut, the corruption of the name betokening the corruption of the caste.

As to the locale of the sacrifice above-mentioned, there is some doubt. We have the same or a similar story told about the Sarwaria Brahmans,* whose habitat is Gorakhpúr, adjoining the Bhúínhár. It is well known that all Northern Gorakhpúr and Champáran were till recent times a dense forest, only broken by such sparse settlements of the Aryans as Simránw and Janakpúr. Two Bhúínhár brothers are reported to have immigrated into Champáran from across the Gandak, and to have founded the families of Bettiah and Sheohar, about two centuries ago. This would lead us to place the scene of the legend in the Doáb between the Gandak and Sarjú (Gogra) were it not for the presence of a Bhúínhár prince at Benares. It is useless, however, to speculate on the original seats and subsequent migrations of the more obscure castes in the present state of our knowledge. The heroes who have died sine vate sacro are so numerous in India, and the people are as a rule so careless of the past of their race, that it may be reasonably doubted whether we shall ever be able to pick up the lost and broken threads of Hindú history.

Bhúínhárs do not marry with Brahmans, nor, I believe, with Rajpúts. They are a fine manly race, with the delicate Aryan type of feature in full perfection. Their character is bold and overbearing, and decidedly inclined to be turbulent.—B.

* See Kanaujiya.

Bhrigubansí, بیرگُبنسی भ्रिगुवंसी

A tribe of Rajpúts.—See Barhauliá.

Bhadauriyá, بيدوريا भदौरिया

A branch of the Chauhán Rajpúts; but the Chauháns are disposed to deny this relationship, now that from motives of convenience the two tribes have begun to intermarry.

They are divided into the six Clans of Athbhaiyá, Kulhaiyá, Mainú, Tasseli, Chandarseniá, and Ráut.

We find Bhadauriás in Mehrabad of Sháhjahánpúr, Jánibrást of Etawah, in a few Parganahs of Cawnpore, and in the Saugor Territory, to which they were invited by Akbar after his partial conquest of that province. They are in chief force in Báh Panáhat of Agra, and the country to the south, which after them is called Bhadáwar. Some say their name is derived from Badara between the Chambal and the Jumna; others, more correctly, from Bhadaura in the neighbourhood of Atair.

The family of the Raja of Bhadáwar aspire to a high antiquity,* but the entire absence of any notice of them in Chand's description of the attack of Pirthí Raja on Kanauij, in which he takes occasion to mention all the tribes that joined either party, and in the annals of the early Musulman Empire, discredits their claim. Yet on the grounds of this antiquity of lineage, as well as of their fidelity to the British Government (which was otherwise most amply rewarded by a Sayer compensation of 24,000 Rupees per annum), a rent-free grant of thirty villages has been bestowed upon the adopted heir of the family. Amongst other pretensions advanced, it was stated that the Bhadauriá, Harchal Deo, joined Timúr's standard, and received Ráprí and Chandwár as a reward for his allegiance. Now, it is evident from the accounts in the "Zafar-náma," "Habíbu's sair," "Rauzatu's safá," and "Matla'u's Sa'dín," which all treat in great detail of Timúr's invasion, that no Hindú chief united himself with that conqueror; and even if he had, the tyrant, during his rapid course in Upper India, could have bestowed no fief that was worth acceptance; and much less would his bigotry have suffered him to bestow it on an infidel. It also appears that he never advanced fifty miles to the south of Dehli,* and therefore could not have conquered the Raja of Ráprí and Chandwár. Moreover, what serves entirely to disprove this alleged gift is, that it is expressly stated in the "Tawárikh-i Mubárik Sháhi," that Timúr had scarcely turned his back on India, when Sayyid Khizr Khan sent his Wazír to levy the revenue of Chandwár, "which had been due for some years, and recovered Jalesar out of the hands of the Rajpúts of Chandwár;" so that the Chandwár family, instead of losing, must have increased their possessions during the troubles succeeding Timúr's invasion.

* We are led to infer, from a passage in Tod's "Rajasthan" (ii. 44, 45), that the Bhadauriás were established on the Chambal by Manika Rai, Prince of Ajmír, or, at least, shortly after his reign. Now, as he flourished towards the close of the seventh century, the Bhadauriás must have preceded the Chauháns of the Doáb, if reliance is to be placed on his statement.

Again, it is said that in the reign of the Emperor Akbar, the holder of the Raj, Rajjú Ráut, distinguished himself by slaying Hetá, a Meo freebooter, who resided at Hatkánt,† a fastness in

* It may be as well to observe here, that the "Rauzatu-s safá," and "Tabakát-i Akbarí" state that Amír Jahán Shah was sent with other distinguished commanders to sweep the country on all sides (جانب) of Dehli; whereas Ferishta and the "Matla'u's sa'dín" say "the country south (جنوب) of Dehli." Whichever reading we assume to be correct, it is evident that if these foraging parties had reached even as far as Mathura, that important seat of idolatry would not have escaped the notice of these annalists.

† The first direct mention we have of their stronghold Hatkánt is in the "Makhzan the ravines of the Chambal; but the contemporary author of the “Akbar-nāma” confutes the assertion, as he states that, in the third year of the reign, the estate of Hatkánt was given in Jagír to Udham Khan, for the purpose of suppressing “the Bhadauriá Zamíndárs of that place, who had long been famous for their turbulent opposition to the imperial authorities.”

و از سوانح آنست که ادهم خان و جمعی را بر سر هتکانت فرستادند شرح این اجمال آنکه هتکانت در نزدیکی دارالخلافه آگره است از و مستحکم ترجائی نیست و زمینداران آنجا از طایفه بهدوریه و غیر آن بر بسیاری مردانگی اشتہار دارند و همواره با سلاطین هند سرکشی کردند بیرامخان چون همیشه از ادهم خان متوهم بود اندیشید که آن محال بجایگزین او را مقرر شود تا باین وسیله از در خانه دور گردد و هم متمردان نواحی سزا یابند و بیک خیال دو کار نیکتر بتقدیم آید بنابر آن اندیشه آنرا بجایگزین مقرر کرده رخصت داد*

Afghání;” but in that they receive anything but honorable mention. It is said of Sikandar Lodi in 915 H. :

و در سن نهصد و پانزده از لہاور بنواحی هتکانت رسیده آن محال را از اہل شرک و طغیان مصفا ساختہ و متمردان آنجا را بقتل رسانیدہ و جابجا تہانجات نشانده بدارالخلافه آگره نزول اجلال فرمود

“And in the year 915, having arrived from Lahore, in the neighbourhood of Hatkánt, having purged that estate of robbers and freebooters, and having slain the rebels of those parts, and having established police-stations in various places, he returned to his capital, Agra.”

* The author has unfortunately omitted to mention the page or volume of the work. I have made a long search through the voluminous “Akbar-nāma” in vain. A free translation of the passage is as follows:—“At this time Udham Khán was

This account is confirmed in the second volume of the "Jahángír-náma," a work of which the first parts have been too much neglected.

و همدین آیام ادهم خان کوکلتاش را به تسخیر هتکانت که در نواحی دارالخلافه اکبر آباد ازان محکم تر جائی نیست و بهدوریه نام قومی در انجا توطن دارند و بشجاعت و مردانگی از اکثر زمینداران عام امتیاز می افرازند تعیین فرمودند و گروهی از امراء نامدار مثل بهادر خان و حسین قلیخان و سید محمد باره و شاه قلیخان محرم و صادق محمد خان و اسمعیل قلیخان و خرم خان بکومک او مقرر شدند ادهم خان و سایر امراء بتائید دولت ابد پیوند مفسدان بهدوریه را تادیب سزا داده آنولایت را که بجایگیر ادهم خان از دیوان اعلیٰ مقرر گشته بود متصرف گردیدند *

It appears, therefore, that the Bhadaurias, so far from performing any service to the Imperial Government, were themselves the parties on whom punishment was inflicted. It is sent with a force against Hatkánt, which is a very strong place near the capital, held by zemíndárs of the Bhadauria clan, who are renowned for valour, and have always been in rebellion against the kings of India. Berám Khán, who was always suspicious of Udham, in order both to get him away from court, and also to put down these rebels, gave him this estate and sent him off, thus killing two birds with one stone."—B.

* I have also been unable to identify this passage, which appears to be corrupt in some places:—"About this time he sent Udham Khán Kokiltásh to subdue Hatkánt, a very strong place near the capital, and the Bhadauria clan reside there, who are celebrated for valour above all other zemíndárs; and with him he sent a number of celebrated leaders, as Bahádúr Khán and others. Udham Khán, with his party, having chastised the Bhadaurias, the jagír of the estate was conferred on him."—B.

nevertheless said that for this service (that is of expelling the Bhadaurias), the Bhadauria Raja received not only an assignment of the conquered land, but also a Mansab of 7,000. Here again they are completely at fault, and disproved by the same author, who distinctly asserts, in the "Aín-Akbarí," that no dignity above 5,000 was ever bestowed upon any but the King's own sons. The higher and more extravagant Mansabs, which we read of in later periods, were not given during the reign of that monarch. They begun to be introduced by his son, who commenced the practice by bestowing a Mansab of 30,000 on his Queen, Núrjahán. Whether a member of the Bhadauria family ever attained in Akbar's time the dignity even of 500, which is claimed for him on the authority of the "Aín-Akbarí," may be doubted; for in several copies which have been consulted the name of the family is not given in the Register of the Mansabdárs of 500.

In the reign of Akbar's successor, the family does not appear to have been held in any higher consideration; for in the memoirs of Jahangir, translated by Major Price, it is said, "Among other objects which I accomplished about this period was the suppression of a tribe of robbers, called Fehndia, who had long infested the roads about Agra, and whom, getting into my power, I caused to be trampled to death by elephants." In all the Persian MS. copies which have been examined, this strange word Fehndia is written Bhadauria; and the fact tells much against the alleged respectability of the family. The words of the original are as follows:

بيدوريه جماعتی بودند كه اكثر راهها ميزدند و دردي ميكردند

These instances have been adduced in order to shew that the high claims that have been put forward in favour of the family are somewhat unreasonable; and were, indeed, entirely needless, as its respectability for many years past has been unquestionable.

It was from the time of Jahangir's successor that they appear to have been held in consideration by the royal family of Dehli.

In Shahjahan's reign Kishn Singh Bhadauria is down as a Mansabdár of 1000.*

In Muhammad Shah's reign we find one of the family, Anirudh Singh, a Mansabdár of 6,000, and Faujdar of Laháwar; and although the patentee had to pay the handsome price of fifteen lacs of rupees, it must be confessed the dignity was high for a Rajpút of so small a principality. In the time of this Emperor, the personal virtues of Raja Gopal Singh, the father of Anirudh Singh, were also held in high consideration, as we may learn from the interesting correspondence of Naunidh Raí. The "Tárikh-i Muzaffarí" also says of Anirudh Singh, that Saadat Khán had such a regard for him that he used familiarly to call him his son; but it is evident, from the perusal of the many contemporary histories of that period, that the consequence of the Bhadaurias declined before the close of Muhammad Shah's reign. We find the Raja's Fort invested by the Maráthas, his country plundered, and afterwards subjected to heavy contributions, and one of his successors compelled to go into exile for several years to escape the ravages of the victorious Játs, who had subdued the Bhadaurias and confiscated the Raj: and when at last Raja Bakht Singh was restored, he succeeded to but little of his former possessions, for in the words of the accurate Murtaza Khán, "times are now changed, and weakness has fallen on the Bhadauria; much of his territory has been retained by the neighbouring Rajas, and he is obliged to be content with but a small principality." This was written about the year 1790 A.D.†

* "In the 22nd year of Shahjahan Raja Badan Singh Bhadauria is down for 1500, and his son, Raja Mahán Singh, for 1000. Kishn Singh is entered as Jauhar." E. add.

† From inquiries made in 1845 by the Commissioner of Agra it appeared that

To sum up all, it may be said that the immediate cause of their aggrandizement is obscure, but is as likely to have been a pair of large eyes, as the capture of a fort (see Bhatula); that their political importance lasted no longer than for a few years at the beginning of the last century; that their illustrious lineage even now invests them with consideration in the eyes of surrounding Rajas, who allow the Bhadauria to sit higher than themselves, who receive from him the investiture, or rather impress, of the Tilak, who confess that he alone can cover with grain the lingam at Batesar (the Rana of Gohad having tried twenty-one maunds in vain, while the Bhadauria accomplished it with seven)—and that though influential, they are not of that high importance which they would arrogate to themselves. It is to be feared, also, they are much addicted to infanticide; so that when we take all these circumstances into consideration, there seems reason to acknowledge that the indiscriminate bounty of the British Government might perhaps have been more worthily bestowed.

Bhadariyá, بیدریا भडरिया

See Dakaut, of which tribe they are a sub-division.

Bhagtá, بیگتا भगता

A tribe of Ahírs.—See Ahír.

Bhangí, بینگی भंगी

The name given to the low caste occupied in sweeping and other menial domestic services. The Puráns say they are descended from a Súdra and a Brahman's widow. They extend throughout the whole of Hindústán, and are called indifferently Bhangí, Lálbegí, Khákrob, Halálkhor, and Mihtar.* Those who have remained, like their ancestors, Hindús, chiefly worship Lál Guru, which is the familiar name of the Rákshasa Aronákarat; and those who affect Musulman observances have converted this name into Lálbeg, and state that he was an immediate follower of the prophet. The names of some of their Gots are Baniwál, Bílparwár, Ták, Gahlot, Kholí, Gágrá, Sarohí, Chandáliá, Sirsáwal, and Siriyár. There are several besides these; but all the different Gots intermarry on terms of equality.

Raja Bakht Singh's possession of Bah Panáhat was only interrupted by the Játs in 1768 A.D. (1176 F.S.), and recovered by the Raja from 1769 to 1784 (1177 to 1192 F.S.), when he lost it again.—E. add.

Low as this tribe is in the scale of social life, they consider others engaged in the same occupation far lower than themselves, such as the Dhánuks, Sekris, Ráwats, and Helas. Bhangís, however, eat the leavings of all classes. Helas pride themselves on eating only those of Hindús. The claims put forward by these lower classes show how much more caste is a privilege than a degradation.—See Chuhrá.

Bhangís cannot in general be said to be of any particular religion, but they are, perhaps, more Musulman than Hindú. They bury their dead; occasionally sacrifice, in the name of Lálbeg, a fowl which has its throat cut after the Musulman fashion; and perform Tíja after the death of relations, which is also a custom peculiar to Musulmans. They generally, nevertheless, profess to be Hindús, because their marriage, and a few other ceremonies conform chiefly to the Hindú modes.†

* Bhangí, probably, from their drunken habits, from blang; Lálbegí, from their object of worship; Khákrob, from Persian خاک khák, earth, and روب rob, sweeping; Halálkhor, from Persian حلال halál, lawful; and خور khór, eating, because everything is lawful to them as food; Mihtar, from Persian میhtar mihtar, prince, said to have been applied to them in derision.—B.

† There is a Bhangía caste in Chota Nagpur. J.R.A.S., vol. viii., p. 411. E. add. Tod. Raj. ii. 624.

Bhangúriyá, بهنگوريا भंगूरिया

A tribe of Tagás, which has a few villages in Siyána, a parganah of Bulandshahr.—See Gaur Tagá.

Bhansará, بهنسرہ भंसरा

A subdivision of the Ahír tribe, q.v.

Bhanwag, بهنوگ भनवग

A small class of Rajpúts, of which we find a few in Mariyáhu of Jaunpúr, and Sayyidpúr Bhitri of Gházipúr.

Bhar, بهر भर

One of the aboriginal races of India, called also Rájbhār, Bharat, and Bharpatwa. Common tradition assigns to them the possession of the whole tract from Gorakhpúr to Bundelkhand and Saugor, and the large Parganah of Bhadoí, in Benares (formerly Bhardaí) is called after their name. Many old stone forts, embankments, and subterraneous caverns in Gorakhpúr, Azimgarh, Jaunpúr, Mirzapúr, and Allahabad, which are ascribed to them, would seem to indicate no inconsiderable advance in civilization.

The wild Bhíls of Marwar are called Bhaunrís (Irvine on Ajmír, p. 17). See also A.S. No. 145 of 1844), but I know not whether there is any connexion between them and the Bhars. The Bhoyas and Bhuttias of Agorí and Singraulí, who are generally classed as Ahírs, may probably bear some relation to the Bhars, though no trace can now be had of their descent. The Cherús also, q.v., are sometimes said to be a branch of the Bhars.

Bhars are now occasionally found in the original seats of their occupation, filling the meanest offices: swine are especially given over to their care ; and they have credit with the common people for being well acquainted with the depositaries of hidden treasure.

On the hills to the eastward of Mirzapúr, they retain a few principalities. Korar, Karaich, and Húráha are each held by Bhar Rajas, and the country between Bijaygarh and Chainpúr is full of them. The famous fort of Bijaygarh, amongst many others, is attributed to them, being called a Bharávatí fort.*

It is strange that no trace of Bhars is to be found in the Puranas, unless we may consider that there is an obscure indication of them in the "Brahma Purana," where it is said that among the descendants of Jayadhwaja are the Bharatas, who, it is added, "are not commonly specified from their great number;"† or they may, perhaps, be the Bhargas, of the "Mahabharata," subdued by Bhim Sen on his Eastern expedition.

The Bhars consider themselves superior to Rájbhars, notwithstanding the prenomén of Ráj ; but this claim to superiority is not conceded by the Rájbhars. They do not eat or drink with one another.—E.

The whole of Azinggarh was formerly occupied by Bhars or Rájbhars, who were dispossessed by Rajpúts of the Gautam clan, and are now swineherds, and possess no estates.—Records N.W.P. iii. 133. They also held the Parganah of Bára in Allahabad, but were there also dispossessed by Rajpúts of the Banáphar, Baghel, and other clans. They have left behind them several architectural works of great merit, as the ruins of a fort at Bhiṭa, and a palace at Sheorájpur. They are said also to have held Khairagarh down to the dismemberment of the Kanauj kingdom.—Rec. N.W.P. iv. 401, 413.—B.

* Bharwá is a parganah of Chota Nagpúr. See J.R.A.S., vol. viii. p. 409. There are also some Bhars near Simla, whose features have a Kol type.—E. add.

† So also the "Harivansa" says of the Bharatas, I. p. 157. "They form an immense family whose numbers it is impossible to mention."

Bharbhúnjá, بیڑیونجا भड़भूँजा

In the Glossary Bhadbhújá, and again Barbhúnja; in which place they are said to be the same as Halwaí, which is not quite correct. The literal meaning of the word is Grain-parcher, and denotes the general occupation of the tribe. They are traditionally said to spring from the intercourse of a Kahár with a Súdra woman. They are generally considered to be divided into seven Kúrís or clans, of which the most famous appear to be the Kanaujia, Sukhsena, and Utarráhá. They do not intermarry.

A class of Káyaths, particularly those of the Máthúr tribe, who follow this occupation, are distinguished by the same name. but have no other connection with the original Bharbhúnjas. They can never be got to enumerate the names of the seven clans with any uniformity; and it may therefore be doubted if that definite number of them exists.

Bharpatwá, بهرپتوا भरपत्वा

A subdivision of the Bhar tribe, q.v.—See also Gaharwár.

Bhartkúl, بهرتکول भर्तकूल

One of the subdivisions of Gaur Brahmans, q.v.

Bhaṭ, بیت भट

The name of a Brahmanical tribe in Kariát Síkhar, and other parts of the Benares province. They derive their origin from a Maráṭhi Brahman of the name of Mor Bhaṭ, and a Sarwaria mother.

Bhaṭ Gaur, بیتگور भटगौर

A subdivision of the Gaur Rajpúts, q.v. Also of Káyaths; see next Article.

Bhatnagar,

بہٹناگر

भटनागर

A large tribe of Káyaths, who derive their name from Bhatner. They are found in great numbers, almost conterminous with the Gaur Brahmans, from Sambhal and Moradabad to Agroha and Ajmír: but are also scattered over some of the Eastern provinces, in which their establishment dates from the time of Ghyásu'd-dín, in the middle of the 13th century. When the King's son, Náşiru'd-dín Karrá Khán, was appointed to the Government of Bengal, he was accompanied by several Bhatnagar Káyaths, who were high in his favor. These men soon became much intermixed with the Gaur Káyaths, the old residents of that country, at which the old Bhatnagars were scandalized; insomuch, that when Náşiru'd-dín returned, some years after, to Dehli, to dispute the succession with Kaikobad, and was for some time encamped at Kásna, the old Bhatnagars refused to associate with them, and the heretics consequently became distinguished by the name of Gaura Bhatnagar or Bhatgaur.

The Bhatnagars are not considered very pure Hindús, and are more addicted to drinking than other Káyaths, but their official position has enabled them in some places to acquire considerable influence. They are the Kanúngoos of Gwalior and of Mahában in Mathurá.

The Gaura Bhatnagars are Kanúngoos of Mariyáhu in Jaunpúr, of Chapra and Múngír (Monghyr). To these Eastern divisions they appear to have been appointed by Náşiru'd-dín. The females of these families are taken in marriage by the Western Bhatnagars, but a reciprocal privilege is denied to the Gaur Bhatnagars, as they are considered to have forfeited their claims to an equal rank by their amalgamation with the Gaurs.—See Gaur Káyaths.

The Káyaths in the N. W. P. are entered in the census 351,463, diffused all over the province.—B.

Bhattachárj, بہتاچارج भट्टाचारज

See Kanaujiyá Brahman.

Bhattí, بہٹی भट्टी

A Rajpút tribe of Yadúbansí descent, the rulers of Jaysalmer, giving name to the Bhattí territory between Hissar and the Garra. (See Bhattiana.) The once formidable Fort of Bhatner, perhaps, also derives its name from them, though a different origin is ascribed to it. The Bhattís of those parts were, it is said in the "Survey Report," converted to Mahomedanism in the time of Akbar, but the fact is not probable, as few conversions took place in his reign. It is stated in the "Annals of Rajasthan" (ii. 213, 260) that they were converted shortly after Timúr's invasion, and that on this occasion they changed their name from Bhátti to Bhatti. It does not appear, however, that there is any authority for this latter statement.*

It was shortly after Timúr left India, that a colony of Bhattís migrated from the neighbourhood of Bahawalpúr, under their leader Bersi, and captured Bhatner from a Mahomedan chief, who had himself lately conquered it from the Játs. It is not improbable, however, that there were Bhattís even at that time already in the neighbourhood, though the annalists of Timúr's invasion mention the Játs only. The son of Bersi was, after his father's death, compelled to sustain three several attacks of the Mahomedans, and on the third occasion was reduced to such straits as to be obliged to consent to conversion as the condition of retaining his conquest. The circumstantiality of the account invests it with some probability.

A large clan of Bhattí Rajpúts are said to have come to

* In Bikaner they are called Bháti. The conversion of their Raja to Islam was effected by Firoz Shah. Prinsep's Tr. ii. 368. Tod, i. 85, 534; ii. 186, 211. The Hindú traders of Shikárpúr, in Sindh, are Bháttias. E. add.

Bulandshahr under a Raja Kánsal in the time of Pirthí Rajá. A few of the descendants of the original stock are now in Tilbegampúr, Dádri, etc., but the greater part of them have by intermarriages become Gújars. The Bhattís are held to have had 360 villages, and the tract from Loni to Kasna was called after them, Bhatner. There are a few also in Tigrí and Ujhárá of Rohilkhand.

Bijhoniya, جيونيا बिज्ञोनिया

A tribe of Rajpúts in the Parganah of Ghisua, Zilla Jaunpúr.

Bilkhariya, بلکھریہ बिलखरिया

A tribe of Rajpúts of the Bachgotí Chauhán stock. There are many of them in Dhuriapár, a Parganah of Gorakhpúr. They derive their name from Bilkhar, in Oudh.

Badgújar, بدگوجر वडगूजर

One of the thirty-six royal races of Rajpúts, descended, like their opponents the Kachhwáhas, from Ráma, but through Lava, the second* son. We find them in great numbers from Sambhal, Seondara, and Salempúr in Rohilkhand to Atraulí and Koel, and even Jalesar in Mathurá. They are also in Shamsabad of Farrakhabad, Ayta of Mainpúrí, and in Gorakhpúr. Another clan, now entirely Musulman, is found to the Westward of Muzaffarnagar.

Colonel Tod says that it was in Anúpshahr that the Badgújars, on their expulsion by the Kachhwáhas from Rajor, found refuge; and that is still the chief town of the Badgújar family. But, as this expulsion occurred only in the time of the illustrious Siwaí Jay Singh, in the beginning of the last century, the chief of Rajor must have chosen for his residence a part of the country which was already in occupation of his brethren; for Baḍgújars are mentioned, even in Akbar's time, as the Zamíndars of Khúrja, Dhabáí, and Pahássú.

* The elder son (vide Tod, Rajasthán, i. 46, 117; ii. 364).—B.

Their own assertion is that they came from Rajor, the capital of Deoti, in the Mácheri country, under Raja Partab Singh, and first resided in Kheria, near Pítampúr, and that the Raja, after marrying at Koel into a Rajpút family of the Dor tribe, which at that time occupied the whole country between Koel and Bulandshahr, obtained favor in the sight of the Dors, and got authority to establish himself as far Eastward as he chose. Having, in consequence, exterminated the Mewátís and Bhíhars, who are represented to have been in previous occupation, he was so successful as to acquire the possession of sixteen hundred villages, eight hundred on the East, and eight hundred on the West of the Ganges. At the time of his death, Chaundera, near Pahássú, was reckoned the chief possession of the Baḍgújars, and one of the descendants of Partáb Singh, Raja Salibahan, whose residence was at Chaundera, gave his own name to a Parganah which comprised the present divisions of Pítampúr, Pahású, and Biraulí.

Raja Partáb Singh left two sons, Játú and Ránú. Játú took up his abode in Katehr, or Rohilkhand, and Ránú remained as chieftain of Chaundera.

The antiquity of the Katehr Baḍgújars may be surmised from a passage in the Rathor Genealogies, "Bharat, the eleventh grandson of Nayan Pál, the Rathor, at the age of sixty-one, conquered Keneksir, under the Northern Hills, from Rudrasen of the Baḍgújar tribe." Nayan Pál is supposed to have lived in the fifth century. Though there appears no occasion for ascribing to his reign so early a date, he must, at any rate, have long preceded the final Mahomedan conquest of Kanauj.

While the Katehr Baḍgújars and the Anúpsahr family have preserved their ancient faith, nearly all the Doáb tribes, which preceded the expulsion of their chief from Rajor, have turned Mahomedans; and the early opponents of the British in Kamonah and Pandráwal were Baḍgújars of that persuasion. They still, however, appear proud of their Rajpút lineage, for they assume the appellation of Ṭhákúr. Thus we hear the strange combinations of Ṭhakúr Akbar Ali Khán, and Ṭhákúr Mardán Ali Khán.*

At their marriage they paint on their doors, and worship the image of a Kahárí or female bearer, under whose instructions they executed a stratagem by which they exterminated the Mewátas who had been engaged in a drunken revel during the Holí. Some of the Musulman families have of late discontinued this custom.

The Baḍgújars to the west of Muzaffarnagar were all converted to the Mahomedan faith in the time of Alá-ud dín Khiljí, but they still retain most of their old Hindú customs. A stricter conformity to the Musulman tenets was endeavoured to be introduced by some reformers, and all Hindú observances were sedulously proscribed by them; but when it was found, as they themselves assert, that all their children became blind and maimed, in consequence of their apostacy, they were induced to revert to their ancestral customs, and still adhere to them with so much pertinacity, that it is almost doubtful which faith prevails most.

The Muzaffarnagar Baḍgújars state that they came from

* The converted Rajpúts of Northern Behár are similarly called Ṭhakurái, which title they affix to their name, as 'Ináyat 'Ali Ṭhakurái. In Eastern Behár we find a still more singular combination of names, the converts to Muhammadanism retaining Hindú names with the prefix of Shaikh; as Shaikh Ram Chand, Shaikh Kishn Singh, and other eccentricities. In the parganahs of Dhaphar and Náthpúr, of Purániyá (Purneah), is a tribe of Brahmans who use the Pathán title Khán, which was given them by Sher Shah, I believe, or some other of the emperors of Delhi. The females of this tribe do not, however, take the title of Khánum (which would be the proper feminine of Khán), but call themselves, oddly enough, Khányáíú (खांयाई), an almost unpronounceable title, which is evidently formed on the Hindí principle, as kunjirín, a huckster, barhain, a carpenter's wife, chamáin, a midwife, etc.—B.

Dobandesár near Dháin Dawása, south of the Alwar country, under one Kurásen, whose ancestor, Bába Megha, is still invoked when they make their offerings at the time of naming their children. They intermarry with the converted Pundír Rajpúts of Sakraudá in Saháranpúr, and the Ráo Badgújars in Farída-bad of Ballabhgarh, to the south of Dehli. They seem to know but little of their brethren who reside in the neighbourhood of Anúpshahr.

The place whence they emigrated may be easily traced, for Dawása, or Deosah, lies on the Bangangá river, about thirty miles east of Jaypur, and Dháin is about eight miles to the south of Deosah. Deosah is famous as being the first place belonging to the Badgújars, which was occupied by the Kachhwáhas after their emigration from Narwar in the middle of the tenth century. It is not improbable that the Kachhwáhas may at this period have compelled the Badgújars to emigrate in search of other seats, and they in their turn may have wreaked their vengeance on the Kachhwáhas of the Upper Doáb, and established their Chaurasí among the brethren of their distant foe. Certain it is, that tradition assigns a large tract of country in these parts to the Kachhwáhas, before the Badgújars, Játs, and Pathans obtained possession.—See Kachhwáha.

The Sikarwál Rajpúts state that they are a branch of the Badgújars; but they are separately entered among the thirty-six Royal Races in Tod's list. It is to be observed, however, that in some of the other lists which he has given ("Annals of Rajasthan," vol. i. p. 81), neither Badgújars nor Sikarwáls are entered.

Barmbhát, برم بھٹ वर्मभट

See an account of this tribe under the article Bhát.

Bisen. بسین विसैन

A powerful tribe of Rajpúts in the eastern parts of these provinces. To the westward they do not extend beyond Rasúlábád of Cawnpore. We find them in Kewaí, Kararí, Karra, Chail, Bára, Khayrágarh, and Aṭharban, in the Allahabad district; Chibúmau in Banda; Badlapúr and Mariáhu in Jaunpúr; Bhadoí, Pandra, and Aṭhgáwán in Benares; Shádiábád, Pachhotar, Bahriábad, and Haveli in Gházípur; Muhammadabad Gohna, Nízámabad, Mahul, and Bhadáṇw of Azimgarh; and Chillopar, and Salempúr Majhauí of Gorakhpúr. In Oudh they have three hundred and sixty villages.

The Bisen families to the north of the Gogra intermarry with the Sarnet, Súrajbars and Kalhans Rajpúts, and receive the daughters of Chandel, Bais, and inferior Chauhans.

The acknowledged chief of the Bisen stock is the Raja of Salempúr Majhauí. The founder of the political influence of the family was Mewar Bhat, whose ancestors had for many generations resided as devotees in the neighbourhood of Nawápur, now known as Salempúr Majhauí. Mewar Bhat, though himself a religious man, was not able to withstand the solicitations of ambition, and taking up arms after returning from a pilgrimage to Benares, acquired possession of the greater part of the country between the Ganges and the great Gandak.

Mewar Bhat had four wives. By one, a Rajpútní, he had issue Bisú Sen, the founder of the name of Bisen, and the ancestor of the Raja's family. By a Bhúinhar he had Bagmar Sahí, the ancestor of the Kawarí and Tamakhoí Rajas. By a Brahminí he had Nages, whose descendants hold a few villages in Salempúr Majhauí. By a Kurmí he had the ancestor of those now resident in Ghosí of Azimgarh.

The present incumbent of the Raj is said to be in the hundred and fifteenth generation from Mewar Bhat.

Bishṇaví,

بشنوي बिष्णवी

A tribe of growing importance in Rehar, Sherkot, and some of the neighbouring parganahs of Rohilkhand. They are found also in great numbers in Bikanír, Nagor, and Hissar ; and small communities of them are also found in the Upper Doáb. They are not to be confounded with the ordinary Vishnavas, of whom Wilson has given us an account in the “Asiatic Researches ;” yet they do not appear a sect of modern origin, as they are mentioned in the “Aín Akbarí” as the Zamíndárs of Islampúr in Sirkar Badáínw. The “Tambíhu'l jáhilín” says that they derive their name from Bishnu, a Tagá Brahman, a pupil of a Musulman Fakír, who appears to have been a free-thinker ; and that hence arises their regard of Musulman observances. They worship according to the Hindú ceremonial three times a day, and pray after the Musulman fashion five times a day. They keep twenty-eight holidays during the year, and observe the fast of Ramzan. They read both the Kuran and Hindú Pothís. They refrain from meat and intoxicating drinks, and intermarry. They generally call themselves Shaikhs, adding that title to a Hindú name, or adding sometimes a Hindú title to a Musulman name. Sometimes they bury, and sometimes burn their dead. They consider themselves more Hindús than Musulmans ; which gives the author of the above-mentioned work the opportunity of remarking how strange it is that, notwithstanding most of the teachers of the dissenting sects have been Musulmans, as is the case with the Kabírpanthí, Parnámí, Dáúdpanthí, Sádih, Kalálpanthí, and Bishnaví sects ; yet they all call themselves Hindús.

In Coleman’s “Mythology of the Hindús,” p. 310, there is a description of a sect of Bishnavís, called Dhámián, inhabiting Bundelkhand, but it is evident from the description given of their tenets that they are followers of the famous Prán Náth, who established a notorious influence over the mind of Raja Chhattar Sál.

Bohrá,

بھرا बोहरा

A class of money-lenders frequently met with in the North

West Provinces, more especially in the Upper Doáb. A description of those who have been converted to the Mahomedan faith is given in Vol. VII. of the "Asiatic Researches," and Malcolm's "Central India," II. 212. The printed glossary would seem to imply that there are in India none except those on the Western coast.

The Bohrás of these Provinces, either come from the neighbourhood of Jaypúr, or are descendants of the original settlers from that quarter, and preserve some peculiarities of speech and dress by which they are readily known. An inferior class of Bohrás is known under the name of Kaiyáns and Rahtís. They lend money to agriculturists and others in a small way, generally by tens, and for every ten rupees take a bond for twelve rupees, payable by instalments of one rupee per mensem, by which means they realize a large interest upon their money. The continually revolving nature of their dealings, and monthly visits to each of their debtors, have, with reference to the constant revolutions of the Rahaṭ, or Persian wheel and buckets, procured them the designation of Rahtís. The derivation of the term Kaiyán is not so certain.

The Bohrás, who probably derive their designation from the word Beohar or trade, are monied men, and possessing credit elsewhere, have larger dealings, and with higher classes than the Rahtís have, but, like the latter, are generally eager to acquire possession of profitable estates; there is, however, this difference between the two, that the Rahtís lend, and will take in return, only money; whereas the Bohrás are ready to receive every marketable article, including the produce of the soil as well as cattle, among which may be enumerated horses, camels, sheep, and goats, in payment of their debts.*

* The "Borah" in Bombay is a travelling pedlar, or, as we say in Bengal, "box-wallah." The Kaiyáns are generally Jains, or rather the Jains are called in Behar by the name of Kaiyán.—B.

Búhar,

بُہار بھار

A predatory tribe on the frontier, between Bikanír and Bháwalpúr (See Report of Boundary Commission, dated 10th June, 1849, p. 26).—E. add.

Búndelá,

بوندیلا बूंदेला

A spurious tribe of Rajpúts, who give name to the province of Bundelkhand. They are descended from Gaharwárs of Kantit and Khayrágarh. Various accounts are given of the origin of the name. They themselves state that they are so called from the devotion to Binda (Vindhya) Basní, for which their ancestors were conspicuous. The “Kshatr Prakash” says, that Raja Pancham, one of their ancestors, determine to sacrifice his life in honor of Binda Basní Bhawání, but that she kindly interposed just after he had begun to inflict a wound on himself, and that the drop of blood (बूंद búnd) which fell from the wound on the earth became a Kuñwar, or Prince, and hence his descendants are called Búndelás.

The whole genealogy, however, of this work, which is the foundation of Colonel Pogson’s “History of Bundelkhand,” is completely wrong, and this story has been made up to cover the disgrace of a humble origin.

The intelligent author of the “Hadikatu’l-akálím” gives a much more probable origin of the name. He says that Hardeo, one of the Gaharwár family, came with a slave girl from Khayrágarh, and took up his abode at Garh Karár, in the neighbourhood of Urcha. He was there invited to give his daughter in marriage to the Raja of Urcha, which he refused to do, as the Raja was a Khangar. After much importunity he consented, on the condition that the Raja and his family should come to the marriage feast, partake of the viands, and thus lose all distinction of caste. The Raja consented, was poisoned with all his family, and the Gaharwár obtained possession of the country.

His son was called Búndela, because he was the son of a slave girl (Bandí), some say the daughter of the Khangar Raja; and this name has been given to his descendants.

The establishment of the Búndelas, to whatever it owes its origin, probably occurred about the beginning of the thirteenth century, after the Chandels had been humiliated by the Chauhans, and they in their turn had been compelled to yield to the supremacy of the Musulmans. The country around Kalinjar and Mahobá must then have been in so distracted a state, as to have invited the attack of the first chieftain who could muster a band of followers sufficiently strong to maintain their occupation.*

Narsingh† Deo, one of the descendants of Hardeo, obtained the appellation of Dáng, equivalent to a dacoit, and hence arose the name of Dángaya applied to Eastern Bundelkhand, particularly the part East of the Dassán, which was held by the descendants of Chattarsal; so that neither from the name of Búndela, nor that of Dangaya, does this stock derive any honor. The estimation in which it is held for fraud and chicanery may be learnt from the familiar proverb :

न सौ डंडी न एक बूंदेलखंडी

That is, one native of Bundelkhand commits as much fraud as one hundred weighmen.

* Franklin (Trans. R. A. S. Vol. I.) gives a later origin to the Búndelas. He says that from the time of Mahmúd to Timúr anarchy prevailed in the country of Bundelkhand; and that about the time of Timúr's invasion Dewadri Bir from Goharbhani (evidently the country of the Gaharwárs) established himself with his followers at Mao Mahoni (Máu on the Jumna), and thence by degrees the dominions of the Gaharwárs extended to the Westward, till they included the whole of what is now called Bundelkhand.

† More correctly Birsingh, according to E. add., but he seems in some doubt as to which is the correct name. Tod Rajasth. i. 117, mentions Bír Singh, but it is doubtful if this be the same man. The original name of Gahawár, or, as Tod writes it, Gherwal, is still retained in the original seat of the family. Urcha and Dhattiá are their chief places.—B.

In British Bundelkhand there are few Búndelas, except in the Parganah of Panwárá.

Bauriyá, بَورِيا बौरिया

A tribe of robbers in the district of Muzaffarnagar, said to number two thousand and upwards. These men were possessed of a perfect organization for thieving purposes, and carried on their trade all along the Grand Trunk road, and into the Panjáb. They are also known as Bagrís (q.v.) and Magahyas, and though attention has been chiefly drawn to them from their assembling in the Muzaffarnagar district, yet they are known to be spread all over the country from the Jhelum river to the Narbadda. They claim to be Rajpúts from Chittor, and are mentioned, under the name of Báwari, by Tod (Raj. ii. 318) among the degraded or apostate tribes, and as professional thieves. In the N.W.P., however, they seem to be neither Hindú nor Musulmans. This name is said to be derived from “Báwar,” a snare; but I doubt this. They, like all other doubtful and low castes, say they have seven clans, to which they give grand names, as follows:—Powar, Soharki,* Dobás, Chauhán, Tuar, Dhandhára, and Gordhí. They add sometimes an eighth, called Chámi. They admit a connection with the well-known bold, inveterately thievish, and dacoity-practising Badhaks of Bhojpúr and Gházípur, also with the Magúrs and Bagoras of Gwalior. (See, for a full account of these men, Sel. from Rec. N.W.P. Vol. IV. pp. 109, 253.)—B.

Bach, ब. बच

An inferior tribe of Rajpúts in Mongra of Jaunpúr.

Bachgotí, بچگوتي बचगोती

A Rajpút tribe, said to be descended from the Mainpúrí

* It is so written in the report from which I take the information, but is probably a misprint for the well-known Rajpút name of Solankhi.

Chauháns. The names of their progenitors were four brothers Gúge, Gáge, Gautam, and Rání.

There are several Bachgotís on the borders of Jaunpúr and Gorakhpúr, and in the South Eastern part of Oudh, where the two most conspicuous chiefs of the tribe are the Raja of Kurwár and the Dewán of Hasanpúr Bandhwa. The last, notwithstanding his being a Musulman, and hence called Khánzáda, invests all the Rajas of Binaudha with the Tilak. The Sombansí chief of Araur, the Bisen of Rampúr, the Kanpúrya of Tiloí and Bandhalgotí of Amethí would not be considered entitled to the privileges exercised by their ancestors without receiving it from his hands. The consequence of this family has, however, somewhat declined since the Dewan Roshan Ali Khan Khanzada was killed in action by Muhammad Kulí Khan, the nephew of Nawwáb Šafdar Jang.

It may be proper to add, that most people deny the right of the Hasanpúr Bandhwa family to the title of Dewán, which they say belongs only to the Bilkharia family; and in practice it is certainly usual to give the title to the latter.

The Bachgotí are of old notorious for their turbulence. We read of it as early as the time of Sikandar Lodi and Sher Shah, in the "Tawárikh-i-Afághana;" and again in Muhammad Kazim's history of the reign of Alamgír. From these histories, and from the "Tabakát-i-Akbarí" and "Tárikh-i-Badáoní,"*

* There are two works called the "Tabakát-i-Akbarí," and two works called the "Tárikh-i-Badáoní." Of the former, only that by Názimu'd-dín Ahmad Bakhshí has been quoted throughout these notes: and of the latter, that by Abdu'l Kádir bin Malúk Shah. He himself calls the work "Muntakhabu't-Tawárikh;" but this is the title of so very many works, that I have preferred "Tárikh-i-Badáoní," by which title the work is now more generally known in Hindústan. The other "Tárikh-i-Badáoní," contains "a valuable history of Hindústan by Abdu'l Razzák Malúk Shah, of Samarkhand," which I have never had an opportunity of seeing. This description of the work rests on the highly respectable authority of Dr. Lee (Preface to Ibn Batuta, p. xiii.): yet I cannot help thinking he may possibly have been mistaken; and what somewhat encourages the suspicion is, that the next work he quotes is the "Matlau's-Sa'dín," we learn also that the Khánzádas must have been converted to Mahometanism before the Mogul dynasty commenced, as we read of Bachgotís with Musulman names before that period.

The Bilkharias (q.v.), Rajwárs, and Rajkumárs are offshoots of the Bachgotís.

Bárí, باری वारी

A class of men who occupy themselves in making and lighting torches, and occasionally as barbers. They are said in Brahma and Padma Puránas to be descended from a barber and female tobacconist.

In the Oudh service they have acquired the reputation of being very excellent soldiers, and some of them have attained to the dignity of Rájá.

Bhaṭkariyá, بیٹکاریا भटकरिया

The name of a class of inferior Bais Rajpúts resident in the district of Jaunpúr.—See Bais.

Baghel, بگھیل बघेल

Literally, tigers' whelps, from باگه a tiger.*

Abdu'l Razzák ibn Ishák, of Samarkand, which title is perfectly correct. As the names so closely resemble each other, and follow so closely, may we not suppose that Razzák and Samarkand have been given to Dr. Lee's "Tárikh-i-Badâoní" by some oversight, and that it may really be the same work which has been occasionally cited in this supplement.—E.

For further information about these works the reader should consult the valuable and learned article entitled "Materials for the History of India," by Major Nassau Lees, which has recently appeared in the J. R. A. S., Vol. III., p. 414. The "Muntakhabu't-Tawárikh" of Abdu'l Kádir has been published in the Bibliotheca Indica of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, but I do not find anywhere any notice of the other "Tárikh-i-Badâoní" mentioned by the author. The "Ṭabakát-i-Akbarí" of Nizám (not Názim) u'd-dín is also noticed in Major Lees' article, but has not yet been published.—B.

* Tod (Raj. i. 99) spells the word Bhagel, and says they are so called from their founder, Bhág Ro, which is, I think, the most probable story. See also Records N.W.P., iv. 413.—B.

A branch of the Solankhí tribe of Rajpúts. They give name to the large principality of Baghelkhand, or Rewa, to the South of Allahabad, and were formerly rulers of Guzerat, where some chieftains of this family are still to be found. They acquired considerable influence during the time of Akbar, who in his youth was for a long time a companion of Raja Ram Baghel, and whose mother was indebted to him for protection during the troubles of Humáyún.

In our own provinces we find Baghels in Bundelkhand; Chibrámau, Tirúá and Thaṭṭia of Farakhabad; (the Raja of Thaṭṭia is a Baghel) in Sarh Salempúr of Cawnpore; Bárah and Aráil of Allahabad; Bhadoí of the Benares Raja's Domains; Salempúr Majhauí of Gorakhpúr; and Sohágpúr.

The Baghel chief of Rewa, or Bhagel (for it appears to be written in both ways), is the descendant of the famous Sid Raí Jay Singh, the ruler of Anhalwara Pattan from A.D. 1094 to 1145. His Court was visited by the Nubian Geographer, Edrisi, who distinctly states that at the time of his visit the chief adhered to the tenets of Buddha.

Bagsariyá, بگسریا बगसरिया

A small clan of Rajpúts chiefly found in Kundúrkí and Sirsí of Moradabad. It is also the appellation of a clan of Kanaujia Brahmans, of which there are a few families in Gorakhpúr.

Baheriyá, بهیریا बहेरिया

A clan of Rajpúts in Ghiswa of Jaunpúr and in Chanár.

Bahlím, بهلیم वहलीम

This tribe has a few villages in Dásna and Mírat. They are Shaikhs, but do not rank high in the scale of respectability. Some of the sub-divisions of Rohilkhand Banjáras are called Bahlím, and evidently derive their name from this tribe.

Balesar, بلیسر वलिसर

A sub-division of the Gújar tribe, q.v.

Bamhaniyá, بمہنیا बम्हनिया

A sub-division of the Káchhí tribe, q.v.

Bamhangaur, بمہن گور बम्हनगौर

See Gaur Rajpút.

Bamtelí, بمتیلی बमतेली

The name of a Rajpút tribe which preceded the present Zamíndárs of the Eastern portion of parts of the Central Doáb. They still remain in the original seats of their occupation, but are not held in high consideration.—E.

They appear to be found now only in Farakhabad and Cawnpore, where their name is also pronounced Bhúíntelá, which is probably more correct than the other.—B.

Banáfar, بنافر वनाफर

A tribe of Yadúbansí Rajpúts which is found in considerable numbers in the Southern parts of Oudh. There are some also in Kárra of Allahabad; in Narwan, Havelí, and Katehar of Benares; in Garra Mandla; and in Bundelkhand.* Their original seat is Mahoba, and they have acquired much celebrity from their clansmen, Ala and U'dal, whose desperate bravery in their contests with Pirthí Rájá forms the subject of several well-known ballads, and gives title to one of the sections of Chand's voluminous poem.†—See Chandel.

* There is a tract in Parganah Chandla called after them, Banaphari.

† It is the twentieth prastáv of the Prithi Raja Rásá, and is entitled आल्हा उदल महोवा जुद्ध “The fight with Ala and Udal at Mahobá.” It contains 308 kavitts, about 3000 lines in all, and is consequently rather too long to quote.—B.

Banjára,

بنجاره वनजारा

In addition to what is stated in the printed Glossary, it may be as well to mention that the word appears to be derived from the Sanskrit Banij वणिज् a merchant, and not, as Shakspeare's Dictionary tells us, from the Persian Biranjár برنجار rice carrier; the word being of higher antiquity than the Indian connection with Persia.* Thus we find mention of a cock fight in a Banjara camp in the story of Ramati in the "Dasa Kamára Charitra," written by Dandi, a predecessor of Kálidása, according to Colebrooke ("Introd. to Hitopadesa"). It is to be confessed, however, that Wilson does not assign an earlier origin to this compilation than the ninth century ("Journ. R. A. S." No. IX. p. 135). Nevertheless, independent of this testimony, Banjáras seem to be clearly indicated, even by Arrian, as constituting one of the classes of Indian society (Indic. xi.). We may therefore rest assured that we are not to look to Persia for the origin of the name.

The Banjáras of these provinces are not always wandering merchants, but many are denizens of the long tract of country under the Northern hills from Gorakhpúr to Hardwár. Most of those who are Musulmans ascribe, like the Lodanahs of Central India, their origin to Multan, or its neighbourhood, and state that they were converted to Mahometanism by Shaháb'ud-dín Ghorí; but it is probable that, like the Multanis of the Deccan and the Lodanahs, they did not leave their native country till about the time of Nádir Shah's invasion. The Hindú genealogical records usually consider Banjáras to be Chárans, or bards, who have chosen a wandering life, and disregarded the literary accomplishments which are considered to be their birthright. Their origin, however, as the text says, is involved in great obscurity.

* They are, however, frequently called Brinjaras in India: which gives some colour to the derivation from the Persian.—B.

Those of Central and Western India are doubtless usually Chárans. The sacred character of their office inspires respect among the lawless, but superstitious, people with whom they have to deal, and grain and merchandize under their charge are allowed to pass without question.

The original stock of Banjáras mentioned above as living in the Northern forests have become much intermixed with other classes, and men of all tribes are constantly deserting their homes, and joining the Banjára fraternity.

The mere names of their tribes are sufficient to show this. The Turkia Banjáras are divided into thirty-six tribes: Tumar, Chauhán, Gahlot, Dilwári, Alwí, Kanothí, Búrkí, Dúrkí, Shaikh, Nathámír, Aghwán, Badan, Chakíráha, Bahrárí, Padar, Kaník, Ghari, Chandaul, Telí, Charkhí, Dhangaia, Dhanhíkaia, Gaddí, Gotahní, Títar, Hindia, Ráha, Marauthia, Khákhará, Kareya, Bahlím, Bhattí, Bandwarí, Bargadda, Alía, and Khiljí. These assert that they came originally from Multan, and left their newly chosen country of the Dekkan under a leader called Rustam Khan,* and first of all took up their abode at Badlí Tánda,† near Moradabad, from which they have gradually spread to Bilaspúr, Richha, and the neighbouring tracts. They are for the most part occupied as carriers.

* They probably mean the famous Rustam Khan, who held the Government of Sambhal for some time during the reign of Shahjahán. He was the founder of Moradabad, which he originally called Rustamnagar; but as that name gave offence to the Emperor, he called it after Prince Murad; to whom, however, he was subsequently opposed in the famous action in the Chambal, in A.D. 1668, in which he lost his life.

† Tánda is a settlement or camp of Banjáras. There are many towns called Tánda in various parts of India, from their having once been depôts or encampments of some Banjára patriarch. The large village called Tánda in Gujrát district in the Panjab, a few miles from the place where the Chenab river issues from the hills, is entirely inhabited by Labánas, which is the Panjabi name for this tribe. The assertion in the text that Labánas are employed entirely in agriculture is very erroneous. I know many large gangs of them who spend their time entirely in carrying grain from mart to mart on bullocks.—B.

The Bayd Banjáras came from Bhatnír under a leader called Doalha. Of them there are eleven Gots : Jhaloí, Tandar, Határ, Kapáhi, Danderí, Kachní, Tarín, Dhorpáhi, Kírí, and Bahlím. Their occupations are more various than those of the Turkias, as they are occasionally employed as doctors and weavers. They are found in Pilibhít, Kánt, and in the neighbourhood of those places.

The Labána Banjáras have also eleven Gots. They state that they are descended from Gaur Brahmins, and came in Aurangzeb's time from Ranthambor. They engage almost entirely in agricultural pursuits.

The Múkerí Banjáras of the Northern Parganahs of Bareilly assert that they derive their name from Mecca, which one of their Naiks, who had his tanda in the neighbourhood, assisted Father Abraham in building ! Leaving Mecca, they came and resided at Jhajjar, where their illustrious name became corrupted from Meccaí into Múkerí. Their fabulous history is not worth recording, but their names also betray a strange compound of tribes, Musulman and Hindú : Aghwan, Moghal, Khokhára, Chauhán, Simlí-Chauhán, Chothya-Chauhán, Panjtakya-Chauhán, Tauhar, Katherya, Pathán, Tarín-Pathán, Ghorí, Ghoríwál, Bangaroa, Kanthya, and Bahlím.

The Bahrúp Banjáras are for the most part Hindús, and lead a more wandering life than the Musulmans. They are divided into the tribes of Rathore, Chauhán or Kúrrí, Powar, Tumar, and Bartia. The origin of the first four is sufficiently apparent from their names. The fifth is said to be derived from a Gaur Brahman. Of these tribes again there are several ramifications. Of the Rathore there are four : Múchhári, Bahúkí, Murháwat, and Panot. Of the Múchhári there are fifty-two divisions ; of the Bahúkí there are twenty-seven ; of the Murháwat there are fifty-six ; and of the Panot there are twenty-three. The Chauhán, who have forty-two Gots, are unanimous in stating that they came from Mainpúrí. The Powars have twenty Gots, and state that they came from Dháranagar. The Tumar, Tuar, and Torí have forty-two Gots, and state that they came from Dehli. The Bartia have fifty-two Gots. They claim Chittor as their original seat. Bahrúp Banjáras, like all the other clans, intermarry, but do allow of any connexion between members of the same Got. They receive the daughters of Nats in marriage, but do not allow their own daughters to marry into Nat families; and they have some curious customs at their marriages, which need not be detailed here.

It is evident that the Bahrúp Banjáras have a close connection with those of the Dekkan. In a paper in the "Bombay Literary Transactions" (Vol. I.), General Briggs divides them into Chauhán, Rathore, Powar and Bartia. In a paper published in the "Journal Asiatic Society" (No. 145, for the year 1844), the last is omitted. It seems strange, where the subdivisions are in the four cases mentioned in the "Bombay Transactions" identical, we should miss the fifth (Tumar), who form so large a clan of our Bahrúp Banjáras.

Before the predominance of the Rohilla Afghans, the jurisdiction of the Rohilkhand Banjáras was of great extent, and in the middle of the last century they held a great portion of the forest, as well as of the country to the South of it. But after the defeat of Raja Harnand by Ali Mahomed Khan, the parganah of Pilibhít was wrested from Daispat Banjára by Payinda Khan, and added to the Jagír of Hafiz Rahmat.

The Banjáras of Gorakhpúr used to commit extensive depredations in that district, and were not put down till a short time previous to the British accession, when they were severely punished by Raja Sarbajít of Bánsi.

The turbulence of the Banjáras has now been entirely suppressed, both in Gorakhpúr and elsewhere, and they have become, under our pacific rule, a quiet and well-conducted people. They now confine themselves principally to the occupations of cattle graziers and carriers, especially the latter.

During the early part of the cold weather, many parties of them visit the Northern and Eastern forests to graze their cattle, and dispose of their cargoes of salt; and on their departure in the hot season load them with rice, tumeric, and other produce of those regions; and as they are distinguished for the honesty of their mercantile transactions, their credit is considerable. They usually take advances from a native merchant to purchase the goods they require, and repay him by a bill from the market where they are disposed of. Each community has a chief or Náik, whom all implicitly obey, and trust in all matters connected with their traffic and conduct. Through him the city merchants make their bargains, for the punctual execution of which he is security. Any Banjára committing an offence against the tribe, or its head, in his public capacity, is tried by Panchayat, and punished by fine or expulsion, as may be thought proper. Their decisions, indeed, are said sometimes to extend to the length of inflicting capital punishment, and such may possibly have, till within the last few years, been the case, for the regions they visit are so remote, that they are pretty secure of escaping detection.

Barhaí,

برہائی वढई

A carpenter.—There are usually said to be, as in many other inferior tribes, seven sub-divisions. Their names are never given accurately; but it is easy to ascertain that there are many more than seven; even the list of the most conspicuous exceeds that number, for among them are enumerated those of Kúka, Mahúr, Tánk, Khátí, Uprautiya, Baman-Barhaí or Mathuria, Ojha Gaur, and Chamár Barhaí.

Barhaiyá,

برہیا वढैया

A small clan of Rajpúts, of which we find a few in Sikandar-púr and Bhadaon and Azimgarh, and Sayyidpúr Bhitri of Gházípur.

Birheriyá, برھیریا बिहिरिया

One of the sub-divisions of the Chamár tribe, q.v.

Barhauliyá, برھولیا बढौलिया

A branch of the Bhrigubansí* stock of Rajpúts, and the chief proprietors of Barhaul in Benares, from the principal town of which Parganah they derive their name. They are said to have come from Raingarh in Marwar, and were on their way to the celebrated shrine of Jagannáth, in Orissa, when their chief, Narotam Rae, accepted service with the Seorí, or Cherú, Raja. —See Cherú.

The Raja rewarded him with several villages, in consequence of being relieved from some dangerous illness by his skill. Rae Narotam was also authorised to raise troops for the expulsion of the Ragbansí Rajpúts, who ravaged the borders of the Raja's territory. When the Raja died, Narotam usurped the chieftainship, and from that period the Barhauliyás have increased their possessions, and still hold several villages in Majhwar, Havelí, Dhús, Mawí, and Mehwarí. Raja Balwand Singh's favourite wife was a Barhaulia girl, whom he seized in one of his forages, and her influence was much exercised in advancing the interests of her own tribe.

Birjiyá, برجیہ बिर्जिया

One of the sub-divisions of the Ahír tribe, q.v.

Barwáík, بروایک बरवाईक

A class of hereditary Chokídars, introduced into the South Eastern extremity of the Bhábar, q.v., for the purpose of guarding and patrolling that inhospitable region. Nearer the hills,

* And therefore of the same illustrious lineage as Parasuráma, who was descended from Bhrigu, one of the first Prajápatis or sons of Brahma. The Bisen Rajpúts also claim the same descent.

in the same direction, we have the Jútíyál, who have been introduced into that tract for the same purpose.—E.

Barwáík is also the name of a tribe of Thárús, a race of Tibetan origin, living in the lower hills, and occupying villages in the plains in Northern Gorakhpúr and Champáran. They now chiefly speak Hindi, but state that those of their tribe who still remain in the submontane districts of Nepal continue to use their own original speech, which, like Magar and Gurung, is Tibetan at base.—B.

Barwár, بروار बरवार

The name given to a class of people engaged in cleaning and selling rice.—See Dhanwaiyá.

It is also the name of a tribe of Rajpúts in Mansúrnagar and Chilúapár of Gorakhpúr; Sagrí, Ghosí, Sikandarpúr and Muhammadabad of Azimgarh; Kharíd and Kopachít of Ghází-púr; and Havelí, Benares.

Batár, بتار बटार

A tribe of Gújars, who are considered to hold a Báwan (i.e. fifty-two villages) in Gangoh and Lakhnautí in Zillah Seháran-púr. There are many also in Bijnor, on the opposite side of the Ganges.—See Gújar.

Baigar, بیگار बैगार

One of the names by which the Kharwár tribe are known. Affecting also a Rajpút lineage, they frequently call themselves Benbans.

Bainsí, بینسی बैंसी

A sub-division of the Gújar tribe, q.v.

Cháhil, چاہل चाहिल

Cháhil, or Cháhira, is the name of a tribe of Rajpúts, of which the greater part is now converted to Mahometanism. There are a few in the Hissar district and on the borders of Bikanír. A peculiar interest attaches to them from their connexion with Goga Chauhán, whose wife, Siriyál, was the daughter of Sinja, the Cháhil, Raja of Sirsa Patan. The memory of this relationship is still preserved by the Cháhil tribe being the exclusive managers of the Saint's tomb.

According to some authorities the Cháhil ranks as one of the thirty-six royal races; but the distinction is not usually conceded to them.—See Goga Pír.*

Chándam, چاندم चान्दम

Rajpúts of this clan are found in Allahabad and Jaunpúr.—E.

The census does not mention any class of Rajpúts with this name; but in Allahabad there are Chandans 393; none in Jaunpúr. They are probably classed under Chandel, as local variations of the pronunciation of names of clans are frequently met with.—B.

Chíhe, چیهی चीहे

See Gújar, of which tribe they form a sub-division.

Cherú, چيرو चेरू

Cherús appear to be the aborigines of Gházípur, a part of Gorakhpúr, the Southern portion of Benares and Mirzapúr, and of Behar. They are sometimes said to be a branch of the Bhars.

There seems great reason to suppose that Cherús are called also Siviri, or Seorí; though Buchanan is of opinion that the two are distinct, and that the Seorís subdued and expelled the Cherús. At the same time, he considers the Kols and the Cherús to be the same, and even to be the ancestors of the Bais Rajpúts ("Eastern India," Vol. I. pp. 24, 406, 407, 457, 465, 466, 494, and Vol. II. pp. 345, 348, 372, 460) ; but his statements can rarely be relied on, and are especially confused when he has to deal with the abstruse subject of Indian Ethnography.

* See J.A.S.B. for 1836, p. 635.—E. add.

It is, however, confessedly very difficult to trace the connexion or difference between the aboriginal tribes of Bhars, Cherús, Seorís, and Kols, and to learn whether their occupation of the above-mentioned tracts was successive or synchronous. As the Cherús declare themselves to be descended from the great Serpent, we may possibly have in them the remnant of the Nágbansí dynasty of Magadha.—(See Gaur Tagá.)

Remains of buildings attributed to them are found near Buddh Gya, Sahasráram (Sasseram), and Ramgarh, and the images of Siva and Hanumán, which are found in them, indicate the prevalence of the Hindú religion.

They appear to have been expelled from their ancient abodes by the Pramars of Bhojpúr, the Hayobans of Hardí, and the Bhúinhárs, not long, perhaps, before the first Mahometan invasion, about which time there appears to have been a general convulsion throughout India, during which several tribes acquired their present possessions. The features of the Cherús are said ("Eastern India," I. 495) to mark them as belonging to the aboriginal tribes of the Vindhya mountains. They live chiefly by cutting timber, collecting drugs, and killing game, and though their numbers are reduced very low, they continue to create a Raja for every five or six houses, and invest him with the Tilak in due form.

We do not read of Cherús anywhere in history, except in the life of the Emperor Sher Shah, who is said to have ordered out Khawas Khan against Maharta, the Cherú, Zamíndar of the districts of Behar. Thus far had the progress of the Rajpúts compelled the aboriginal clan to emigrate; and the extravagant joy shewn by the Emperor at the conquest of Maharta shews that the last efforts of the Cherús to maintain their independence was sustained with considerable vigour. The present chief of Singraulí in Mirzapúr is said to be a Cherú, but he attempts to disguise his origin by the assumption of the title of Benbans. (See Baigar and Kharwar.) Cherús are still found in the Southern parts of the Province of Benares, and in the fastnesses of Ramgarh.

It is probable that the limits assigned in the first paragraph to the Cherús are too narrow, for in the Central Doáb a tradition is still preserved that the Rajpúts of that quarter expelled Cherús. The Kayaths also of Bhúigáñw state that their predecessors were Chirars; and the Chiráhs, who are alluded to in the Glossary as slaves in Etawah, are perhaps of the same race; unless, which is not improbable, this word has been written by mistake for Chela. It would be highly interesting to obtain any authentic memorials of this race, but it does not at present appear that there is any likelihood of adding to our information respecting this or any other aboriginal tribe.

It may not be out of place to hint the bare possibility that in the Siviras, Seorís, and Cherús we may have the descendants of the ancient Suraseni. There is a passage in the "Harivansa" worth transcribing: "From this race came the Sauras, Saurá-víras, and Saurasenís. The great king Saurasena has given his name to the country over which he reigned" (p. 158); and the following passage from a note by the translator is also worthy of record, as shewing the connection between the countries of the Suviras and the Saurasenas: "Le Târâ-tantra appelle le Souvira le pire des pays, et le place á l'est du Soûraséna" ("Harivansa," p. 141). But how does this Eastern position of Suvari coincide with that which is assigned to it on the better authority of Wilson?—See "Vishnu Purana," p. 177, and notes to "Johnson's Selections from the Mahábhárata," p. 65.

May it not be possible also that there may be some allusion to the Seorí, where the Chauhán Raja describes the Súrji as being to the Eastward of Chandelkhand?—See the "Transactions of the Royal Asiatic Society," Vol. I., p. 260.

Chúhrá,

چوہڑا चूहड़ा

The lowest caste of village servants. They are known also by the names Bhangí, Halálkhor, and Khákrob (see Bhangí); but Chúhrá is the most usual term in villages. The head of this tribe, as well as that of Chumars, is known by the title of Mihtar, and receives perquisites under the name of Mihtaraí; so that the word Mihtar, far from being contemptuous, as is usually supposed, is one of honour and dignity. In Persian Mihtar مهتر signifies a prince; literally, greater, being the comparative of بزرگ great. In Sanskrit, also, महत्तर signifies greater, more—a man of the fourth or servile tribe; from महत great, with the affix of comparison: “perhaps,” according to Wilson (Sanskrit Dict., p. 648) “given in derision, or in comparison with the mixed tribes.” The latter is more probable than the former, but it appears more likely that the title was derived from the fourth being more in number than the other three tribes. Either way, both the Persian and Sanskrit terms convey no dishonourable distinction.*

Chúla,

چولہ चूला

Chúla, or Chúlat, is a tribe of Tagas in Baghpat; so called from their having come from Chúlú in Bikanír; which is more commonly known as the mart of Chúrú on the Eastern border of that territory.

Chaube,

چوہی चौबे

A class of Brahmans who originally received their names from reading the four (chau) Veds, as Dube was derived from reading two, and Tribedí from reading three, of the Veds.—See Kanaujiyá.

* This is a mistake. The word مهتر is used of all members of this caste, and is generally supposed to have been conferred in derision by the Mughal invaders India.—B.

Chauhán,*

چوہان चौहान

This highly interesting tribe of Rajpúts traces its origin from the neighbourhood of Sambhar and Ajmer. They have many sub-divisions, such as the Khíchí, Nárbán, Nikumb, Thún, Bhadauria, Bachgotí,† Rajkumár, Hára, Bilkhariya, Chiráiya, Bándhalgotí, etc. These are not all honored with mention in the “Annals of Rajasthan,” where, however, twenty-four Sachæ are enumerated, most of which are not at all known in our N. W. Provinces.

Chauháns are very generally distributed throughout the districts of these Provinces, but we find them in great numbers chiefly to the North and East of Saharanpúr, in Jahangírabad, Faizábad, Sirsáwa, Behat, Jáwálápúr, and Sakraudah (these are now many of them converted to Mahomedanism); in Khair, Chandaus, Sikandra Rao, Mahrera, and Múrthal of Aligarh. In Rohilkhand we find them in Ajaon, Anwla, Saneya, Satási, Mandáwar, Chánpúr, Nagína, Nithaur, Haldaur, and the Eastern Parganahs of Bijnor. In Hamírpúr; Rattanpúr, Bansí, Salempúr Majhauí, and Tilpúr in Gorakhpúr; in Sagrí and Bhadáon of Azimgarh; and in the environs of Dehli and Mirat. But the most important clans of the Chauhán branch

* This name is spelt in a variety of ways. In two MSS. of Chand's great poem, in the Library of the R.A.S., and in one in the Bodleian the following variations occur: चाङ्गमान the oldest and original form; चाङ्गवान, चाह्वान, चाउहान. The first syllable is also sometimes written short—चङ्गवान metri gratid. Much of these variations is due to the unsettled state of Hindi orthography. In a pencil note on his private copy of this work, the author proposes to re-write this article, which is, it must be confessed, rather a scanty notice of this valourous old royal and patriotic race; sangre azul of Aryan chivalry. It is, however unnecessary to do more than note their present geographical distribution in the N.W.P., as Colonel Tod, in his “Annals of Rajasthan,” devotes much space to an ample and enthusiastic account of the noble Chauhans. The reader who wishes to know more about the pluckiest race that Indian history has to show, cannot do better than go to the Colonel's glowing pages for information.—B.

† All Chauháns are, in fact, Bachgotí, inasmuch as they are of the Gotra of Bach.

in these Provinces are those of the Central Doáb, in Khandaulí of Agra; Lakhnau, Jánib Rást, Deolí Jakhan, and the Hazúr Tahsil of Etawah; in Akbarpúr of Cawnpúr; and in Mústafabad, Gihror, Sonj, Etah, Kishní Nabíganj, and Bhúngaíw in the district of Mainpúrí. Of these the most conspicuous are the families of Rajor, Pratápnír, Chakarnagar, and Manchana, the head of which latter is usually known as the Raja of Mainpúrí.* These four families, as well as their relatives, do not allow other Chauháns to associate with them on terms of equality, being descended from the illustrious Pirthí Rájá, and and therefore connected with the regal stem of Nímrana.†

Raja Sangat, the great grandson of Chahir Deo, the brother of Pirthí Rájá, had twenty-one sons.‡ Of these twenty-one,

* The Pratápnír man says the Chakarnagar family is inferior to his own; and that four princes founded Rajor, Pratápnír, Mainpúrí, and Chandwár, which latter afterwards became Bhadauríyá; that four princes more went to Bardwán. That the Pratápnír family went from Rintambhor to Nímrana, and thence to Chibramau; thence successively to Kudarkot, Asáf, Etawah, and, finally, to Pratápnír, in Shujau'd daulat's time. Of these eight princes Sumer Singh was the eldest, who founded Sumer Mau, near Chibrámau, and the fortress of Etawah. The Pratápnír family claim Sumer Singh as their ancestor, thus elevating themselves above Mainpúrí.—E. add.

† These four houses have the title of Raja. The house of Sakraulí in Etawa has the title of Rana; and the houses of Jasohan and Kishní have the title of Rao. Thus, also, amongst the Bhadaurias, besides the title of Raja, we have that of Dewan, which is held by the house of Parna in Bah Panahat; that of Chávand Raí, held by the house of Chitauli in Atair; and that of Rao held by six different houses. The Mainú and Tasseli are altogether excluded from these dignities, being of inferior quality, and contaminated, it is said, with a little Mewatí blood in their veins.

‡ In Tod's Genealogical Table ("Annals," vol. ii, p. 451), this number is ascribed to Raja Lakhansi, the father of Sangat. He mentions also Nanad Singh as the present chief Nímrana. But this is a mistake. Nanad Singh, who is still alive, was never chief; being the illegitimate child of Chandarbhan, the grandfather of the present Raja, Bijay Singh, who is in the twenty-ninth generation from Pirthí Rájá, the last Hindú king of Dehli, who died in prison at Ghazni.

The Musulman historians say that Pirthí Rájá was killed at the battle of the Gaggar, or shortly afterwards; but Chand represents him as dying in captivity at Ghazni; and the Bard would gladly have concealed so humiliating a fact if he could.

the youngest (as in the case of the sons of Dasaratha, and of Raja Sankar in the “Mahábhárata”) succeeded to the throne, in consequence of an agreement to that effect made by Sangat in his old age, when he married a bride of the Tauhar clan, and of the house of Jíla Patan : the issue of this marriage were Láh and Laure. Láh became Rao of Mandáwar, and is now reckoned the head of the clan. Laure became Raja of Nímrána, and receives investiture from the Rao, who marks his superiority by fixing on the Tilak with his great toe, instead of with his hand.

लाह मंडावर बैठियो आठों मंगलवार
जो जो बैरी संचरे सो सो गिरे मार

“Láh, dwell at Mandáwar, prosperous for ever;
Whatever foe attacks thee, let him be smitten dead.”

is a common saying indicative of the superiority of Láh.

The other sons sought their fate and fortunes in different parts. Two are said to have established principalities in the Hills, one of which is now represented by the influential lords of Jamú; two went to Sonkra Sonkrí; one to Khayr; five to Pachwára; from one, the Sheorám Játs are descended; from another, the Khoro Ahírs; and from another, it is said, the vagabond Baunris, q.v.

Sahesh Mal and Harsarú remained in the neighbourhood of Nímrána. Bíghá Raja, the grandson of the former, established the name of Bíghoto बीघोतो q.v.; the latter that of Dhúndhoṭí धुंधोटी q.v. The country of the descendants of Láh is known by the name of Ráth राठ q.v. All the Chauháns of this neighbourhood, and of similar descent, are known by the name of Alanot.

The Mainpúrí family are represented to be the descendants

Several of our Chauhán sepoys, after the capture of that fortress, sought out, and professed to find, the Chhatri (or monument) of their ancestor, where they shewed their devotion to his memory by presenting their humble offerings in honour of the champion of their faith.

in the direct line of Pratáp Rudr, another son of Raja Sangat. He, and some others of the same family, left their original seat at Nímrána, and, invited by the distractions of the Doáb not long after the Mahomedan ascendancy, founded the several principalities of Pratápnír, Rajor, Sakíth, Chandwár, Mainpúrí, etc. etc., of which the last named is considered to rank the highest.

These Chauháns of the Central Doáb formed a sufficiently strong confederacy to oppose frequently a successful resistance to the imperial troops; and the principalities of Ráparí and Chandwár on the Jumna, and Mainpúrí Bhúngáñw, are always spoken of with respect, even by Musulman historians.

In the reign of Bahlol Lodi we find Raí Pratáp, Hákim Zamíndár,* sufficiently strong to obtain the Government of Mainpúrí Bhúngáñw;† and his descendants appear to have maintained for some time subsequent a show of independence, which says much for the credit of their adroit management; for, during that period, this part of the Doáb was constantly

* At that period most native princes were called zamíndárs; consequently, the value of this expression, as applied to Pratáp Raí, is considerably different from what it would be in our days. The author contemplated discussing it under the word Talúkdár, had he progressed so far, as is evident from the note to the first edition.—B.

† و از آنجا بیرگنه کول آمده تمام محال عیسی خان را بدستور سابق
مقرر داشت و از آنجا بیرگنه سکیتہ آمد مبارک خان حاکم سکیتہ
ملازمت نمود محال جاگیر اورا نیز مسلم داشته و رای پرتاپ حاکم
و زمیندار نواحی بہون گانون را نیز برو مقرر داشت و از آنجا بہ راہری
(Makhzan Afghani.) و چنداور آمد

"And thence he came to Pargana Kol, and confirmed Isa' Khan in it as heretofore, and thence to Pargana Sakíth, where Mubarik Khan, hákim of Sakíth, did homage, and received the mehál as a jagir. He also confirmed in his possessions Rai Pratáp, ruler and zamíndár of the region round about Bhúngáñw; and then went on to Ráparí and Chandwár."—B.

exposed to hostile incursions, and was the seat of war for more than half a century, being on the borders of the rival kingdoms of Dehli and Jaunpúr.

To the East of the Rewah territory, and to the South of the Kaimúr range, between Sirgúja and Sohagpúr, there is a district called Chauhánkhand, of which the occupants trace their descent from the Mainpúrí Chauháns, and the same origin is asserted by the Chauháns of Benaudha.—See Bachgotí.

Chauhánkhand is better known to the people themselves* as Chandarkona, so called from their leader Chandarsen,† from whom also Chandwár takes its name; and did not the Chauháns of Chandwár and Chandarkona concur in the same story, it might have been supposed that the latter were descended from the original Chauháns who peopled Gwálkhand and Gara Mandlá.

The Chauháns of Upper Rohilkhand, as those of Nihtor, Haldaur, Sherkot, Afzalgarh, Naginá, Chandpúr, and Mandawar, are considered a very inferior stock, and are frequently not ranked with Rajputs.

The Chauháns of the Gorakhpúr district, branches of which have extended into Behar, are said by Buchanan ("Eastern India," Vol. II. 426) to be descended from Raj Sen, son of Ratna Sen, the last Raja of Chittor. But the whole account was evidently furnished to him by some ignorant scribe, who has mingled the histories of Chauháns and Sísodiás. Nevertheless, the Doctor has accepted and recorded the statement

* The Chauháns of the Upper Provinces say Chandarkona is near Calcutta, or, more accurately, forty miles from Calcutta on the road to Jaggannath, which would bring it very close to Midnapore. Others, again, say it is near Burdwan; and there is a place of that name near Burdwan, according to As. Res. vii., 459. This is a more probable site for a Rajput colony than the wilds of Sirgúja, which are inhabited almost entirely by non-Aryans, such as Kols, Uráons, and the like.—B.

† With respect to Chandarsen, he is claimed not only as the leader of these Southern Chauháns, but as the ancestor of the Bhadauriás, q.v., of which one subdivision bears his name to this day.

without question ; like too many others of a more injurious tendency which have been industriously circulated from his works to the prejudice of the natives of India.*

In the history and traditions of the Chauháns of our provinces, there is little to confirm, or disprove, the alleged modern origin of the race. Many arguments may be adduced against that view of the case, notwithstanding some respectable authorities maintain it. But there is no space for the controversy in this place. (See "Transactions R.A.S.," Vol. I. p. 133.—"Oriental Quaterly Magazine," No. XV.—"Bird's Guzerat," p. 79.—Tod's "Annals of Rajputana," I. 94; II. 439, and "Journal Asiatique," May, 1827.)

* * * The following notice is chiefly taken from General Cunningham's report :—

The Chauháns are one of the Agnikula or "Fire races" of Rajputs. These are four in number—the Parihár, Pramár, Solankhi, and Chauhán, and are fabled to have sprung into existence from the sacred fire-fountain or Analkund on the summit of Mount Abú. "But this claim must be of comparatively modern date, as the common gotrácharya of all the Chauhán tribes declares him to be of the race of Vatsa through five famous ancestors (Bach gôtra pánch pravara). Now, in Fell's inscription of Jaya Chandra of Kanauj, we have a record of a grant of land made in A.D. 1177 to a Kshatriya named Rao Ráshtradhara Varmma, who is said to be of the Vatsa Gotra with the five pravaras (or ancestors) of Bhárgava, Chyavana, Apnavana, Aurva, Jamadagnya. From this document, therefore, we learn that the Chauháns, so late as the reign of Prithí Raja, laid no claim to be sprung from fire, but were content to be considered as descendants of the holy sage Bhrigu through Jamadagnya Vatsa." (Report, Part iv., p. 7.) The fable of the fire-fountain appears according to the same authority to have risen from the name of a Chauhán cowherd, Anala, which means fire, who is traditionally said to have pointed out to the Solankhi Vana Raja, the site of the city called Analwára Patan, long the capital of the Solankhi race; but it may be doubted whether the legend of the cowherd is a bit more authentic, though less violently improbable, than that of the fire-fountain. It is, however, in favour of the legend that Mukji, the bard of the Khichi Chauháns, makes only the Chauháns to be fire-sprung. As regards the name, it means literally "the Desired," as is shown by the original spelling cháhumána, from cháhná "to desire," and the modern spelling chaturman had its origin in the later amplification of the legend to include the four tribes (chatur), "chau" in Hindi being the usual form of chatur in composition. The earliest prince of the race is Ajaypál, whose date is uncertain, and who is said to have founded Ajaymera, or Ajmer. Manik Rai, whom Cunningham fixes in A.D. 800, is considered to be the real founder of the race, and in his time they acquired possession of the country as far as the Sakambhari or Sámbar Lake, and retained it as long as the Muhammadan conquest.

* In justice to Dr. Buchanan it must be explained that his account of the districts he visited, when derived from personal observation, is strikingly correct ; and his laborious and lengthy enumeration of the castes has been so ruthlessly massacred by Mr. Montgomery Martin, that it is not fair to pass an opinion on it in its present state.—B.

The Chauháns ruled at Ajmer till the sack of that place by Muhammad Ghorí in 1193 A.D. It was again attacked and finally annexed by Kutbu'ddin in 1195 A.D.—(See Khichi, Kachhwaha, and Tomar.)—B.

Chakwáín,

چکوائین चकवाईन

A small class of Rajputs in Kopachít, Zillah Ghazipur.

Chamár,

چمار चमार

A tribe employed in the curing of leather. They are said, on the authority of the Padma, Varaha, and Brahmavaivartta Puranas, to be descended from a Mallah, or Boatman, and a Chandál woman. The Chamárs are generally said to be subdivided into seven classes—Jatúa, Kaiyán, Kuril, Jaiswára, Jhusía, Azimgarhia, or Birheria, and Korí, or Korchamra.* These seven do not eat together or intermarry. The Jatúas are chiefly in the North-West. The Dehli Territory, Rohilkhand, and the Upper, and part of Central, Doáb are their seats. The Kaiyáns are in Bundelkhand, and Saugor. The Kurils occupy the greater part of the Central and Lower Doáb. The Jaiswárás meet them in the neighbourhood of Allahabad, and extend through Jaunpúr, Mirzápúr, and Benares, to the neighbourhood of Sayyidpúr Bhitrí, where they are to be met by the Jhusias, who occupy Ghazipur and Behar. The Azimgarhias have their seats in Azimgarh, and Gorakhpúr; and the Korís, or Korchamras, in Oudh. The last are generally engaged in the occupation of weaving.

Other names are mentioned besides these seven, as the Jatlot of Rohilkhand; the Aharwar, Sakarwar, and Dohar† of Central Doáb: but as these latter avow some connection with the Kurils, they may perhaps be included in that tribe. In Behar we meet also with subdivisions of Garaiyas, Magahyas,‡

* All the lower castes attempt to establish a sevenfold division into Gots; but few, if any of them, can enumerate the seven correctly, and no two agree about it. The division is, probably, purely fanciful in most cases. In the list of Chamárs subdivisions given in the text, Kaiyán is a name of the Marwári merchants, who are generally Jains; Jhusía and Azimgarhia are merely local names, from Jhusí, near Allahabad, and Azimgarh; Korí should probably be written कौढ़ी kōhí, or leprous, as the Chamárs, from their filthy habits, are peculiarly liable to this disease.—B.

† The Dohars are mentioned in "Steele's Summary," p. 128, as existing in the Dekkan along with Katnis (cobblers) and Daphgars (Dabgar, maker of oil bottles): but he does not include them amongst Chamárs, of whom he enumerates the following classes—Saltangar, Marathe, Paradosh, Pardesí, Haralbhakt, Dabalí, Wojc, Chaur.

‡ The Magahyas are not Chamárs, but wandering Doms, who live in sirkas, or portable reed-huts, like the Naṭs, Khána-ba-dosh, Bázigars, and others; and, like them, are incorrigible thieves.—B.

Dakshinias, Kanaujias, as well as the Jhusía and Jaiswára above mentioned: all tending to show that the division into seven clans is imaginary.

Chamárs are reputed to be a dark race, and a fair Chamár is said to be as rare an object as a black Brahman.

करिआ ब्रह्मन गोर चमार
इन के साथ न उतरिये पार

That is, do not cross a river in the same boat with a black Brahman or a fair Chamár; both objects being considered of evil omen.

Chamáín, چماين चमाईन

A clan of Gújars, proprietors of about twelve villages in Panipat Bángar.

Also a woman of the Chamár caste, who usually acts as midwife in Hindu villages. (Probably contracted from Chamárin.)—B.

Chamargaur, چمرگور चमरगौर

See Gaur Rajput.

Chandáliyá, چنداليا चनडालिया

See Bhangí.

Chandel, چنديل चंदेल

A tribe of Rajputs scattered in various parts of these Provinces, who for the most part derive their origin from Mahobá in Bundelkhand, which before the Musulman conquest, appears to have been the capital of a principality which extended to the Nerbudda, and included the province of Chanderí, or Chandelí, which is called after their name. Though they are styled Sombansí, they are not considered to be of pure descent, and their sons are carefully excluded from marriages with the higher clans.

The Chandels are found in Osahat, Míhrabad, Púranpúr Sabna, Baragáñw, Jalálabad, and Imratpúr, Parganahs in the South-East of Rohilkhand; Havelí, Sidhúa Jobna and Rattanpúr Bansi, of Gorakhpúr; in Bara, Karra, and Chail, of Allahabad; in Máhul, Sikandarpúr, Muhammadabad Gahná, Nathúpúr, and Nizámabad, of Azimgárh; in Mariyáhú, of Jaunpúr; in Narwan and Havelí, of Benares; in Bhagwat, Bijaygarh, and Agorí Barhar, of Mirzapúr; in Sheorajpúr, Jajmáu, Akbarpúr, Sheolí, and Bithúr, Parganahs of Cawnpúr; and in Bundelkhand. There is also a large clan of them South of Bardí, giving name to a Province called Chandelkhand. They are divided, at least in the Lower Doáb, into the four families of Raja, Rao, Rana, and Ráwat, like the Gautams of the same neighbourhood. Thus the chiefs of the Sheorajpúr Chandels are known as, the Raja of Sheorajpúr, the Rao of Sánpai, the Rana of Sakrej, and the Ráwat of Ráwatpúr, the respective residences of the parties. We learn the turbulence of this Doáb tribe at the early part of last century from the letters of Ranchhor Dás.*

The Chandels of Mirzapúr came from Mahobá after the defeat of Brimaditya, the son of their chief Parimál, by Pirthí Raja. For this was not a mere victory: it led to the temporary occupation of the country; since we learn from Chand (Books 60 and 61), that after the Chauháns had taken Kálinjar, it was occupied by a garrison from Dehli under the Amber prince, Pajjún. These Mirzapúr Chandels are said to have expelled the Bálands, and they themselves in their turn had to flee from the victorious arms of the Gautam Raja of Benares. The chiefs of Agorí Barhar and Bijaygarh, after seeking refuge in Bhojpúr, returned to their old seats on the occasion of the British ascendancy.

* The chiefs of Nálagarh, Kahlúr, and Biláspúr are Chandels, and the first named acknowledges a connection with the Raja of Kamáon.—E. add.

Those of Azimgarh migrated also from Mahobá, but appear to have lingered for some time about Jaunpúr, before proceeding in their onward course to Sikandarpúr.

The period of Chandel emigration eastward is very doubtful. Though no date is so probable as the one above mentioned for their departure, yet we have some incidental testimony respecting those of Rohilkhand and the Doáb, which appears to point to an earlier period.

We find one of the Banaphar heroes boasting in the “Ala Udál Prastáv.” (Chand Bk. 20^o) “Our heads were the pillars of Mahoba; by us were the Gonds expelled, and their strongholds Deogarh and Chanbari added to his sway. We maintained the field against the Jadon, sacked Hindaun, and planted his standard on the plains of Katter.” This refers to a period long previous to Pirthí Raja’s defeat of Brimaditya. We may also be allowed to conjecture that the Chhindú race, which Mr. Prinsep (J. A. S. B., Vol. vi., p. 780) declares to be utterly unknown, and which we find recorded in a very interesting inscription, dated A.D. 992, discovered by Mr. H. S. Boulderson in the neighbourhood of Bisalpúr, is no other than the Chandel, and that they might then have been inhabiting that part of Rohilkhand, on the way to their more distant principality of Champáwat,* and Almorah, of which the representative is the present titular Raja of Kamáon, or, more strictly speaking, his cousin, who is a British pensioner at Almorah. Chand is the title of the holder of the Raj: his Rajput brethren are generally known as Rautela.

* Som Chand, Chandarbansí, established the Raj of Champáwat, A.D. 1178. This period would be in accordance with the Bisalpúr inscription. It is a vulgar, but almost universal error to trace the origin of the Chandels from Jhúsí opposite Allahabad; but the proper reading is Jhansí, in Bundelkhand, a position which connects them immediately with the Chandels.

The Chandels of Rohilkhand themselves state that they derive their origin from Sheorajpúr; and here, again, we have a gleam of evidence that the Sheorajpúr Chandels are older than Pirthí Raj's conquest.

In the famous Arabic work, the "Kitab-al-Yamini," we find that the victorious Mahmúd, after conquering Kanauj, in A.D. 1017, and proceeding lower down into the Doáb, before passing over to Bundelkhand, encounters what appears to be a Chandel chief, and subsequent mention is made of another chief, called Chand Rai, who might also have had some connexion with the same clan.*

* * General Cunningham writes this name Chándel (though in all the copies of Chand it is written Chandel), and as his researches into the history of the race are more minute and explanatory than those of any former investigator, a summary of them is here given.

The Chandels claim to be descended from Chandramá, or the moon, and Hemávati, daughter of Hem Raj, a Brahman, who was the parohit or family priest of Indrajit, the Gaharwár monarch of Benares. The founder of the race was named Chandra Varmmá, and his immortal father promised that his race should reign as long as they bore the name of Varmmá. The result of this promise will be seen hereafter. At the age of sixteen he performed a sacrifice to obliterate the shame of his mother's illicit intercourse with the god. The place where this sacrifice occurred was named Mahotsava Nagara, or the city of the great sacrifice, since corrupted to Mahobá.* The date of this sacrifice is variously given by different annalists: General Cunningham, after an examination of the subject, fixes A.D. 800 approximately as the date of the rise of the Chandel dynasty, irrespective of the legend, which is only another of those frequent instances of the introduction of a divine father to cover the indiscretions of frail princesses, so common in Greek and Roman, as well as Indian story. If the lady were a Brahmaní, it is difficult to see how her descendants can be ranked as Rajputs. The matter, however, is scarcely worth discussing, save for the purpose of shewing how entirely the legendary lore of the people disproves the Brahmanical or priestly view of the rigid separation of caste from caste in early times. The General goes on to analyze the conflicting accounts as to the history of the Chandel race. It would not be in accordance with the plan of this work to go into this question at full length. The result of the inquiry is, that a dynasty of eighteen kings sat on the throne of Mahobá, among whom Raja Gandá (or Nandá as he is called by Ferishta) conquered Kanauj, but was in consequence attacked by, and in his turn obliged to yield to, Mahmúd of Ghazní. This Raja was possessor of the celebrated fort of Kálinjar, which appears to have been his residence. The date of Mahmúd's raid against him is A.D. 1023. Gandá's great-grandson, Kirti Varmma, was subdued by Karna Kulachuri, Raja of Chedi, between 1065 and 1075 A.D.; but Kirti Varmma's son appears to have thrown off the yoke, and to have made conquests in the Antarbed or Doáb.

* In the first edition there was an extract in Arabic, but it was far from being correct or intelligible; and as no reference was given beyond the name of the work, I have been unable to verify it, and have therefore omitted it. It appears to mean that Mahmúd took the fort of Āsí, whose chief was called "Chandál púr!" and further on we come to a word چَندَ بَال "Channadabála," the vowel points of which, at any rate, are wrong. The author admits that his extracts were taken "from a very incorrect copy, and there is no saying how much the names are disguised."—B.

Passing over several monarchs, we arrive at Madana Varmma (A.D. 1130–1163), whose kingdom stretched from the Jumna to the Nerbudda. His son and successor (omitting a doubtful Kirti II.) was the famous Parimál Deva (or Paramáreddhi), the first of the race who did not bear the charmed name of Varmmá, whose reign "has been rendered famous by his long-sustained contest with Prithi Raj Chauhán, which forms one of the most interesting portions of Chand's poem. The warlike deeds of his two champions, Ala and Udal, are also celebrated by Chand, and they still form the theme of many of the most favorite songs of the people of Northern India." In this battle the Chandel was defeated, and the western portion of his dominions wrung from him. He retired to Kálinjar after the loss of Mahobá, retaining only those districts of his former kingdom which lay east of the Kayán (or Cane) river. Kuṭbu'ddín Aibak, however, subsequently besieged and sacked Kálinjar in 1196, after which we hear no more of the unhappy prince, whose misfortunes are said to have arisen from his being the first who did not bear the name of Varmmá, a name which, apparently warned by Parimál's reverses, his successors revived. Nothing worthy of note is recorded of them; save that their fortress Kálinjar sustained sieges, in A.D. 1247 from Ghiásu'ddín Balban, and in A.D. 1530 from Humáyún, from Shir Shah in A.D. 1545, and was finally taken and annexed by Akbar in 1569. Kirti Rai, who held the fort in the sieges of 1530 and 1545, was probably "the father of the celebrated Chandel princess Durgávati, the dowager queen of Garra Mandala, who so gallantly died defending her country against Akbar's general, in 1564."

* Mahobá is fifty-four miles South of Hamirpúr, and thirty-four North of Khajuráho, the other capital of this clan.

As usual with the ancient Rajput kingdoms, when finally annexed to the Mughal Empire, the Chandel monarchy expired, the princes of the race subsided into feudatories, and no further notices are given of them in the historians.—(See Banáphar.)—B.

Chandela,

چندیلا

चंदेला

A clan of Gujars in Mairwara (Dixon's Mairwara, p. 6).—B.

Chanamiyá, چنميا चनमिया

The name of a tribe of Chandarbansí Rajputs in Parganah Rárí of Jaunpúr; Sagrí and Mahul of Azimgarh; and in Amorha of Gorakhpúr. They are generally included among the Bais of inferior descent, and are known also by the name of Gargbans; but the Chanamia and Gargbans are separately entered in the Jatimala in the “Hindí Selections.”

Dángí, دانگي दांगी

Is the name given to Búndelas in the Saugor Territory, and parts of Bundelkhand.—See Búndela.

Díchhit, ديچھيت दीक्षित

(See Kanaujiyá Brahman.) There are Rajputs also of this name in Ghazipur, Azimgarh, and Benares.

Díkhít, ديکھيت दीखित

See Dikhít.

Demráut, ڈيمراوٹ डेम्रावट

One of the twelve Pals of Mewátís.

Deswál, دیسوال देसवाल

A tribe of Tagás who hold about twelve villages in Bághpat.

Dháhimá, دھاهما धाहिमा

A tribe of Rajputs recorded amongst the thirty-six royal races. They were the lords of Biana, and bore a high name for deeds of chivalry. Colonel Tod considers the tribe to be extinct (“Annals of Rajasthan,” Vol. i. p. 119), but they have three or four villages in Baghpat. There are also Dháhimá Ahírs and Dháhimá Játs in the same neighbourhood.

Dhákará, دھاکرا धाकरा

A tribe of Rajputs who hold a few villages in Khandauli in the Agra district, Jalesar in Mathurá, and Dehli Jákhān in Etawa; and are scattered over other parts of the Central Doáb and Rohilkhand. We learn from the letters of Izad Bakhsh that this tribe gave the imperial officers in the neighbourhood of Agra much trouble in the beginning of last century. The following extract is otherwise interesting, as showing the defenceless and dilapidated condition of Agra, even at that early period.* (See Janghárá.)

Dhámíyān, دھامیان धामियान

See Bishnaví.

Dhangal, دھنگل धंगल

One of the twelve Pals of Mewatis.†

Dhánuk, دھانک धानुक

This tribe is employed as archers, fowlers, and house guards, and is engaged in several menial occupations both of the house and field, wherever they reside. The females are especially in request as midwives.

* I give a translation of the important part of this passage :—"And the reason is this that Akberabad (Agra) has no fortifications, and most of its buildings are in ruins and lurking places of thieves, and in its neighbourhood live rebels and marauders. At present one of them, Irání Dhákara, zamindár of Mauza Bálimpúr, Parg. Janwár, a Jagír of the Vakíls of the Government, lying seven kos from the city—having no fear of the officers of justice in his heart,—from Etawah to the capital commits violence and robbery, and stops the roads. Your servants, from respect, have hitherto done and said nothing, in spite of the continual robberies; and I also have been guilty of some little neglect, as I saw that in the absence of fortifications there is no chance of safety for the city and the roads. I cannot venture to act without orders, but request permission to extirpate this rebel."—B.

† More correctly दहंगल dahangal.—E. add.

Dhánuks are descended, according to the Padma Purana, from a Chamár and a female Chandál. From Dhánuks have proceeded the Aheryas, who are also occupied as fowlers. Aheryas are said not to consume dead carcases, as the Dhánuks do. Of Dhánuks there are reported to be seven subdivisions—Longbasta, Mathuriá, Katharia, Jaiswar, Magahya, Dojwar, and Chhilatya.* These do not intermarry, or even eat or smoke together. They mix, indeed, so little with one another, that an individual Dhánuk is seldom able to mention more than two, or at most three, of these names as belonging to his fraternity.

There are several Dhánuks in Dehli, and they are scattered over the north-western provinces, but Behar is the country in which they most abound.†

Dhanwaiyá, دهنویا धनवईया

A thrasher, or seller, of rice.—See Barwar.

Dhandel, دھندیل धंदेल

A tribe of Hara Rajputs giving a name to Dhandelkhand in Bundelkhand. They intermarry with Powar and Bundelas. Also apparently written दंदेल as in the following extract: “The Powars are a shade higher than the Dandees, and the Dandees a shade higher than the Boondeylas, the reigning chiefs of Bundelkhand, with the exception of Jhúsí and Chattarpúr. These chiefs in consequence almost all take their wives from the Powars, who in return make them pay dearly in land and money grants on service tenures. . . . They are by far the

* The usual statement, but not to be believed implicitly. Magahyas are generally classed under Doms, and the author gives them both under Dhánuks and Chamárs, showing how uncertain these classifications are.—B.

† Dhánuks are usually employed as domestic servants in the houses of Rajas, and form in Behar the bulk of the Khawás, as this class is generally called.—B. They are said to fill the office of village watchmen all over Farrukhabad.—E. add.

most troublesome people in Bundelkhand in time of disorder, as they are bold, brave, poor, ambitious, and unscrupulous.—Sleeman.”—E. add. He does not give the name of the work nor reference to volume or page.

Dhe, ڈھی ढे

See Ját.

Dhímar,* دهيمر धीमर

A caste of Hindus, chiefly employed in fishing. They are, properly speaking, a branch of the Bearer, or Kahar, caste; though they are sometimes said to be offshoots of Mallahs, or Boatmen.†

Dherh, ڈھيرھ ढेढ

Name of a caste found in these provinces, chiefly in the Saugor territory. The name is also applied to Bhangís and Chamárs.‡ They eat dead animals, clean the skins, and sell them to Chamárs. In the Nagpúr territory they have acquired some consideration from their employment as Delals.

In the Deccan they are said to be the same as the Mahrs of

* Sanskr. धीवर a fisherman.

† They are also called धीञ्जर and तीञ्जर and मकूञ्जा, and are very abundant in Behar and Benares. Two years ago a prophet arose among them, who said that the goddess Bhawáni had appeared to him out of a pillar in his house and commanded them to leave off eating fish; he collected an immense crowd at Kadba, in Púraniya (Purneah), who came to see the miraculous pillar and offer goats to it, and the prophet in consequence fleeced them considerably. In connection with this revival, the Tíars of Benares nearly killed a man as a sacrifice to Bhawáni; the police fortunately arrived in time to prevent the consummation of the offering.—B.

‡ This word is spelled घेड in Molesworth's Maráthi Dictionary; and I think this is more correct than in the text. But so much uncertainty exists as to the spelling of Hindi that, in the absence of a conclave of paṇḍits, I cannot venture to decide. Wilson, both in Glossary and “Sel. Works,” i. 186, spells it ढेढ.—B.

the Mahrattas (Journ. R. A. S. p. 224).—See also the Printed Glossary under Dheda and Dheyr.

In the Western provinces, though they are now not often found in any numbers, they appear to have left the remembrance of their name, for it is a common term of abuse to call a man a “bará Dherh,” or a low-caste fellow.

In Rajputana, Dherhs will not eat hogs, either tame or wild : the latter they hold in great abomination, notwithstanding their Rajput masters look upon them as a luxury.

Dhirhor, ڈھور ढिहोर

A tribe of inferior Ahírs in Benares and Gorakhpúr. They are reckoned in the Tashriḥu'l aḵwám amongst the Doáb Ahírs.*

Dhobí, دھوبی धोबी

A Washerman. This is considered one of the lowest castes of Hindus. Of Dhobís, as of several other of the inferior tribes, there are generally reckoned to be seven subdivisions. Kanaujia, Magahya, Pagahya, Belwar, Bátham, Srí Bátham, and Bharká. The Kanaujia are to be found chiefly from Kanauj to the borders of Behar, and extend into Gorakhpúr. The Magahya and Belwar throughout Behar. The Pagahya in Rohilkhand and Farrukhabad. The Bátham, and Srí Bátham in Baiswara ; and the Bharká from Mainpúrí and Etawah to the far west. About three-fourths of this latter clan have been converted to the Mahomedan faith. None of these tribes eat, or drink, or marry together. They are as much strangers to each other as the members of any other caste.

The seven subdivisions are not retained under the same names

* There is a subdivision of Kirars, whose name is either dhirhor or daphor ; but the native informant himself was uncertain as to the spelling.—E. add.

in other provinces. In Behar, for instance, we meet with Ajodhyas and Gosars, which are not in the above list.

Dhundhotí, دھندھوٹی धुंधोटी

Is the name given to a tract of country in the Gurgánw district, in possession of the descendants of Chaudharí Harsarú, one of the twenty-one sons of Raja Sangat.—See Chauhán.

The Alanot Chauháns are found in Bighoto, Dhundoti, Chandain, and Ráth. All these names are of mere local application. In the public registers they are not known, nor are they known much beyond the boundaries of the tracts themselves. Bighoto includes the whole of Rewarí, and much more, both to the west and east. Chandain is generally reckoned to be a part of Bighoto, but has been considered for some time past separate. It includes the greater part of Taúrú, and derives its name from the twelve villages of Chand Chauháns, who are descendants of Sahes Mal, another son of Raja Sangat. Ráth is the largest of these districts, and is for the most part included in Alwar. The principal places within this tract are Mandáwar (the chief of which has the title of Rao), Nímrana (the chief of which has the title of Raja), Biroda (the chief of which has the title of Rana), Lahpotí, Bījwar, Kot Putlí, Har-surán, and Narnaul.

Dharmgaur, دھرم گور धर्मगौर

See Gaur Brahman.

Dharwái, دھروائی धरवाई

The Patwarí who weighs grain.—Dehli. The word is derived from Dharí, a measure or weight of five seers, which is generally considered his perquisite at the harvest.*

* Or from धरना "to hold," from his holding the scales; the word is also pronounced धरवाहा, which is equivalent to dharnewálá, in Behar.—B.

Digwár,

دِگوار दिगवार

A Watchman; literally, a protector of the different quarters, or points, of the compass. See under Dig; and Dígwan and Degwar in the Printed Glossary.

Dikhit,

دِکیت दिखित

A tribe of Rajputs inhabiting the Parganahs of Kutia, Fattihpúr, Ekdalla, Muttur, and Ghazipur, in the Fattihpúr districts. They have also sixty or seventy villages to the north of Baiswara, in the Oudh territory, in a tract called after them Dikhtan, and several in Bundelkhand and Benares. The Dikhits of Pachhotar in Ghazipur are called Pachhtariya. They give their daughters in marriage to Sombansí, Raghbansí, Gaharwár, and Bais, and take from Sayngur, Donwár, and Kausik.

The correct denomination of this clan is Díkhit, but Dikhit accords better with the ordinary pronunciation.

Dogar,

دوگر दोगर

A tribe scattered over various tracts of the North-West of Hindústán. There are a few in Hansi, Sonam, and Ferozpúr, which latter place, together with a considerable tract along the bank of the Satlaj, they held for a long time during the last century in almost undisputed sovereignty. Their occupation is divided between pasture and plunder. They are Mahomedans, and state that they were originally Chauháns; but the Káim Khání, and other converted Chauháns of those parts, will not acknowledge the fraternity, asserting that Dogars were nothing but Játs and Gújars. This appears to be the case, notwithstanding all their emphatic negations. Dogars are held in no consideration by their neighbours, but in former times they were much dreaded on account of their predatory habits, which a civilized neighbourhood and a strong Government compel them now unwillingly to relinquish.

Their personal appearance is in their favor. They are a tall and muscular race, and are generally remarkable for having large aquiline noses.

* * Dogar or Dugar is also the name of a family of Kaiyáns, or Marwari Jain merchants, to which belong Rai Lachmipat Singh Bahádur and Rai Dhanpat Singh Bahádur, the wealthy and public-spirited bankers and landed proprietors of Murshidabad. These are not the same as the Doghras of Jammú, in the hills between Kashmir and the Panjab; the latter are considered a mixed race, and are despised accordingly by their neighbours. They, however, call themselves Rajputs, and, apparently, with justice. There is not much in their appearance to indicate a mixture of race. They eat and smoke with the Bhojpúri Rajputs. Guláb Singh, the ruler of Kashmir, was of this race.—B.

Dom, ڈوم or ڈومرا डोम or डोम्रा

Said, in the Printed Glossary, to be a race of out-castes: slaves in Kaṭṭak and Kamáon. Their history is worth enquiring into, as they seem to be one of the aboriginal tribes of India. Tradition fixes their residence to the North of the Gogra, touching the Bhars on the East, in the vicinity of Rohini. Several old forts testify to their former importance, and still retain the names of their founders; as, for instance, Domdiha and Domangarh. Ramgarh and Sahankot, on the Rohini, are also Dom forts. Buchanan considers that the Doms are the same as the Dom Katar (Domtikar). ("Eastern India," Vol. II. p. 453.) He also conceives that the Doms expelled the Thárús, and were afterwards expelled by the Bhars: but this order of precedence cannot be admitted.

There are several Doms, or Domras, scattered over the Western districts of these Provinces, and in Bundelkhand and Saugor, who are engaged in the menial occupations of making ropes, fans, mats, and such like articles. In Oudh the term Dom is applied to sweepers, as Bhangí and Chúhra are elsewhere.

Dom is also the name of a tribe of Musulmans descended from Bhats. They are, perhaps, more generally known by the name of Mírásí and Pakhawají. The name of Mírásí is abbreviated into Mír: and thus the Mírs of the Kala Naddí, after whom Mírapúr is called, having assumed this distinguished title, are frequently able to conceal the truth of their being really descended from the Mírásí Surkh.*

* * The Magahya Doms of Champáran are a race of professional thieves. They extend their operations into the contiguous districts of Nepal. They are rather dainty in their operations, and object to commit burglary by digging through the walls of houses; they always enter a house by the door, and if it is dark, they carry a light. Of course all this is merely done by way of bravado. Magahyas never live long in one place. They move about, constantly pitching their ragged little reed tents or sirkas outside a village, or on a grassy patch by the road-side, like our gipsies, till they have done all the plundering that offers itself in the neighbourhood, when they move off again. They are small and dark, with long tresses of unkempt hair, and the peculiar glassy eye of the non-Aryan autochthon.—B.

Domṭikár, دوٹیکار दोमटिकार

One of the sub-divisions of Sarwaria Brahmans, q.v.

Donwár, ڈونوار डोनवार

We find Zamíndárs of this mixed Rajput-Brahman tribe in the Parganah of Sidhúa Jabna in Gorakhpúr; in the Parganahs

* See for a short notice of the religion of the Doms "Select Works of H. H. Wilson," i. 60, 181.—B.

of Havelí, Karendra, and Sayyidpúr Bhitrí, of Ghazipur; and in Kariát Mithú, Mahomedabad-Gohna, Sikandarpúr, Bhadaón, and Maunáth-Bhanjan, of Azimgarh. They call themselves Thákúrs, but they are generally considered Bhúinhárs, or Military Brahmans.* Even those who claim Brahmanical descent marry into Rajput families, so it becomes doubtful in what class they ought to be included. They were strong enough at one time to establish a principality on the Kosi in Western Tirhút, and there are several monuments still existing in that neighbourhood which attest the power of the Donwár Raja, Karná Deo. The word appears to be pronounced indifferently, Donwár, Danwár, and Dunwár.†

Dúbe,

دوبي दूबे

See Kanaujia Brahman.

Dugdhá,‡

دگدھا दुग्धा

A tribe of inferior Brahmans on the borders of Fattihpúr and Allahabad. They date their origin from the time of Jay Chand, who figures in so many fabulous legends of those parts. A certain Pande Brahman, by name Barú, set up his abode as a recluse in Parsakhí, between Shahzádpúr and the Ganges, and withdrew himself entirely from worldly concerns. His credit as a holy man was so great, that Jay Chand became anxious to see him, and promised to reward any person who would bring him into the presence. After several unsuccessful attempts by all the chief officers of his Court, a woman of the Rajput tribe, and of great personal charms, ventured on the difficult undertaking. Her wiles and blandishments could not be withstood, and before long the holy hermit confessed himself father of several children; and as the lady succeeded in the object of introducing him to an audience with Jay Chand, a grant of several villages was bestowed upon her. On the death of the hermit she is said to have married a Kází, but it is not probable that such a connexion took place at that early period of the Mahomedan conquest. However, she divided the inheritance, it is asserted, amongst her children. Those by the Pande, who were Dugdhá Brahmans (i.e. of mixed blood), received forty-eight villages, of the greater part of which they are in possession to this day. The Musulman descendants also retain some of the villages said to have been granted at the same time.

* But see the article on Bhúinhárs.—B.

† The Parganah of Danwár, in Shahabad, is probably named from them, or they from it.—B.

‡ Sansk. दुग्धा doubt.

The Dugdhás are reckoned in no repute as Brahmans; indeed, they are properly Bhúinhárs, and are very indifferent about the rank of the families with which they intermarry, not unfrequently receiving the daughters of Rajputs as wives.

Durgbansí, درگت بنسی दुर्गवन्सी

Name of a clan of Rajputs who hold villages in Garwára, Ghisua, and Rárí, in the district of Jaunpúr, and Máhul, in Azimgarh. The Raja of Garwára is a Durgbansí. They are descended from Díkhits, and came to the neighbourhood of Jaunpúr from Simauní in Bundelkhand, about fourteen generations ago. Their relative position in the rank of Rajputs is shown by their giving daughters in marriage to Chamargaur, Bandhalgotí, Tilokchandí, Bais, Sombansí, Súrajbansí, Sarnayt, Baghel, and the Gaharwár of Kantit. Their sons marry into the families of Chandel, Powar, Gautam, Raghubansí, Ujayin, and the inferior grades of Bais.

Dor, डोर डोड़

A tribe of Rajputs, said by Tod to be extinct. Before the immigration of the Badgújars, they were the chief proprietors of Aligarh; and a remnant of them now exists in Dabhaí, Atraulí, Koel, Shikarpúr, and Baran. They are now nearly all Mahomedans. The whole of Kundarkhí and Seondara,* in Moradabad, were also held by the Dors, where they have now been almost entirely supplanted by the Powars. They hold also several villages in Seondha, in the district of Banda, as well as in the Saugor territory, so that they are far from being extinct, though most of them have abandoned the faith of their forefathers. They are included among the thirty-six royal races of Rajputs, and Pirthí Raja honored them by raising a tablet in commemoration of a victory gained over them.—(See Trans. R.A.S., Vol. I., p. 133.)

Dahiyá, دهيا दहिया

A tribe of Játs met with in the Parganahs of Rohtak, Kharhauda, Mandauthí, Panípat, and Sonípat-Bangar.

Dahlán, دھلان दहलान

A tribe of Tagás on the banks of the Hindan, in the Upper Doáb.

Dakaut,† ڈکوت डकौत

A tribe of mendicants of Brahman descent. They are considered to be proficient in astrology. The Bhadauriás are a branch of the same tribe. Both are considered troublesome vagabonds.

Dalál, دالال दलाल

A tribe of Játs, who hold some villages in the Parganah of Mandauthí, Zillah Rohtak.

Dalímá, دليما दलीमा

A clan of Tagás in Sirsa, a Parganah of Moradabad.—(See Gaur Tagá.)

* The old name of Seondara was Deora, so called after this clan.

† Hindi डाकना to bawl, because they beg aloud in the streets.—B.

Damwast, دموہست दमवस्त

A inferior tribe of Rajputs in Tappah Guzára, Zillah Benares.

Dangast, دنگست दंगस्त

A clan of Rajputs in Parganahs Shádiabad and Pachhotar of Ghazipur.

Gáin, گاین गाई

The name of a small clan of Rajputs in Kopá Chít, Zillah Ghazipur, and in Benares.

Gágrá, گاگرا गाया

See Bhangí.

Gára or Garhá, گاڑھا or گاڑا गाड़ा or गाढ़ा *

A tribe of industrious cultivators in Saharanpúr. We find them chiefly in Rúrki, Rampúr, Súltanpúr, and Malhaipúr. They are Musulmans, and are frequently considered to be, like the Jhojhas, converted slaves. They themselves assert that they were formerly Sombans Rajputs, that they came from Nagra Bamera (to the west of Dehli), and that Akbar located them in desert tracts, which have now been cleared by their industry. There seems reason to believe that they are the progeny of Rajput clans, because amongst themselves they have the subdivisions of Badgújar, Chauhán, etc., but there are also perhaps amongst them descendants of several inferior castes. All these, on being converted to Mahomedanism, were called (perhaps contemptuously) by their neighbours, Gáras, from the new practice they had adopted of burying (Gárna), instead of burning, their dead. They now apply the term to themselves, but endeavour to disguise its origin by pretending to high birth. The Gáras generally intermarry in their own clan, but there is a set of villages in Saharanpúr, called Sayyid Gára, from the fact of the daughters of Gáras marrying into Sayyid families.

* Hindi गाड़ना or गाढ़ना to bury.

Gahlot,

گہلوت गहलोट

A tribe of Rajputs from which have branched the two illustrious stems of the Sisodia and Aharya. They are spread over different parts of these provinces, but though they sometimes style themselves Sisodia, they are rarely known by any other name than that of Gahlot. We find them as proprietors in Bhoelí, a Parganah of Mirzapúr; in Khanpúr of Ghazipur; in Nizamabad of Azimgarh; Bilhaur, Bithúr, and Rasúlabad of Cawnpore; in Sadabad, Sahpú, and Jalaisar of Muttra; in Thattia, Tirúa of Farrakhabad; in Ránia of the Bhattí Territory; in Hatras of Aligarh; and in great numbers in the N.W. parts of Bulandshahr. We find them also as cultivators in Khotar of Shahjahanpúr. Those of Bulandshahr say they emigrated to Dehra and Dholana, near Dasna, under Raja Khoman, after the capture of Chittor by Akbar; but it was evidently prior to that period, as they are recorded as Zamíndárs of Dasna in the "Ayín Akbarí." The more probable period is, after the capture of Chittor by Aláu'd dín Khilji. Others say that one of their ancestors, Govind Rao, married Raí Pithaura's (i.e. Prithí Raja) sister, and obtained these villages as a marriage gift. What gives an air of probability to this story is that Govind Rao is mentioned by Chand Bardai as one of Raí Pithaura's auxiliaries. Their neighbours, who, for some unexplained reason, are fond of imputing cowardice to them, say their name of Gahlot is derived from Gahla, a slave girl; but the real origin is the following, which is universally believed in Mewar. When the ancestors of the Rana of Mewar were expelled from Guzerat, one of the queens, by name Pushpavátí, found refuge among the Brahmans of the Mallia Mountains. She was shortly afterwards delivered of a son, whom she called, from the cave (Goha) in which he was born, by the name of Gahlot, and from him are descended the present Ranas of Udaypúr.

* * Dr. Fitzedward Hall, the well-known erudite scholar, has favoured me with the following notice :—

“ It seems probable that the term Gahlot is connected with Guhila, the name of the second king of the Udaypur dynasty. See the “ Asiatic Researches,” Vol. xvi., pp. 292, etc. The apparent eponymist of the Gahlots is called Gobhila in an inscription from Chedi, which I have published and translated in the “ Journal of the American Oriental Society,” Vol. vi. Guhila may have been corrupted from Gobhila, a name occurring in ancient Sanskrit literature; or, which is rather more likely, Gobhila may have been Sanskritized out of Guhila. In popular pronunciation, Guhila must have become Guhil; and we know that gotra was broken down into got. The coalescence of these shortened forms, after both had become still further depraved, may have given rise to Gahlot; a result which would in no wise transgress the lawless licence of Hindí analogies.”

In support of this opinion, I may add, that throughout the Prithvi Raja Rasa, Chand always uses the form Gohil, गोहिल. The following passage from the “Ala údal prastáv” of that poem is interesting, as shewing the Gohil in good and valiant company at an early date, in spite of the later imputation of cowardice. It will be seen that they are decidedly on the side of Parimál, the Chandel king of Mahoba, and opposed to Prithí Raja, though the author above says their chief, Govind Rao, was an ally of the Chauhán :—

किये परिमाल सु ऊकम गाजि ।

चले सब रावत जंग पै साजि ॥

चन्देल वनाफर मुष सु सूर ।

वघेल अरु गोहिल लोह करूर ॥

“The monarch shouted his commands,
To battle marched the Ráwat bands;
Chandel, Banáphar, heroes leal,
Baghel and Gohil, fierce as steel.”

I venture to differ from Dr. Hall about the origin of the last syllable. Having devoted much time to the consideration of the changes which compound consonants undergo in Hindí, I am in a position to affirm that had the word gotra been the origin of the last syllable, the initial g must have held its place, and the final l of Gohil would have been assimilated to it, thus resulting in a form Gohiggot or Gohgot. My theory is, that like so many names of places, clans, and persons, the final syllable is the Sanskrit adjectival termination वन् (वान्, वती, वत्) which coalesces with a long á in the termination of the preceding word into ávat, aut, and ot. Compare Dakaut from ḍakávant (i. e., “shouters” or “criers”), Chandraut from chandrávant, Mahaut from mahávant, etc.; so that the word Gahlot arose from a form Guhilávant, or “Guhila’s people.” Colonel Tod gives in his lists Grahilot (Sisodia) as a separate clan from Gohil, and says the former are the Gahlot of modern times; but Tod’s lists are very incorrect in many respects, and his etymologies are not worthy of the slightest notice.—B.

Gentú

جنتو जेंतू

An Indian, a Hindu. The Printed Glossary says that at Madras the term appears to be used to designate the language and people of Telingana.

This word is a corruption of the Portuguese “Gentio,” a “Gentile.” Dr. Fryer (Travels, 1672 to 1681) says “the Gentues, the Portugal idiom for Gentiles, are the aborigines.” He appears to be the first English writer by whom the term is used, but before his time Pietro della Valle speaks of the Hindus as Gentili, following the example of the Portuguese; yet, notwithstanding these unquestionable authorities, Halhed

(Gentú Code, xxi. xxii.) supposes that the Portuguese borrowed the term Gentú from the Sanskrit word Jant, a sentient being.—(See Ency. Metrop. voc. Gentú.)—E. Further notices from the early travellers on the origin of this singular word (now long since passed out of use) are as follows :—

Nieuhoff, in 1662, calls the natives “Jentyves or Pagans” (Churchill’s Collection of Travels, II. 198). Gemelli Carreri (Works, Part III. Book ii. c. 8) in 1695 says, “As for courage, neither the Mahometans or Gentiles have much of it ; the best of them are the Baluceis (Bilúchís), borderers on Persia ; the Patans of the kingdom of Bengala, and the Rasbootis (Rajputs), very great thieves.” Ralph Fitch, in his travels in 1583 (Hakluyt, II. 385), speaks of “Moores and Gentiles.” Gaspar Balbi, in 1579, has “Gentiles” (Purchas, II. 1723). In the title page of Baldæus, printed in Churchill’s collection, they are styled “Malabars, Benjias, Gentives.” In the body of the work occurs “Moors and Pagans ;” again, “the Gentives are sorely oppressed by the Persians and Moors,” p. 591. “As well Gentiles as Mahometists,” says Antony Jenkinson, in 1558 (Hakluyt, I. 372). In all these cases the term Gentile means Hindu as distinguished from Musulman.—E. add.

Ghorcharhá, گہورچڑھا घोरचढ़ा

A sub-division of the Kurmís. The literal meaning of the word, if rightly spelt, is a horseman. I am not sure that there may not be some connexion between them and the Kurcharra, whom Tod puts down in Chand Bardái’s list of the royal races.

Ghosí, گہوسی घोसी

Herdsmen. They are said to be descended from Ahírs. Most of them have now been converted to Mahomedanism ; indeed, the name is generally considered, according to the Dictionaries, to be exclusively applied to Musulman milkmen. The name is derived from a Sanskrit word signifying a cattle pen. The Eastern Ghosís who have been converted are called Bandí Ghosís.

In many parts of the country, as in Dehli, Ghosís are those who trade in milk, without any reference to their caste or religion.

Ghand, گھند घंद

A subdivision of the Ját, q. v.

Ghanghas, گھنگھس घंघस

See Ját.

Gobrí, گوبری गोब्री

This is the name of a tribe in Rohilkhand, of which there are a few traditions preserved in the Taráí. From that they have been expelled, and now live on, or just under, the Hills.*

Godará, گودارا गोदारा

See Ját.

Golá, गोला गोला

An inferior caste, employed in the manufacture of salt. The following contemptuous distich of popular poetry perhaps exalts them above their deserts :—

जाट गडरिया गूजर गोला

इन चारों का हेलो मेला

“Ját, Gadarya, Gújar, Golá,

These four are all the same sort of people.”

Golá púrab, गोला पूरब गोला पूरव

An inferior tribe of Sanadh Brahmans, but very spirited

* They were formerly Ahírs. Their great hero was Raja Parsun, who was bitten by a snake, and of whom Rohilkhandís still sing.—E. add.

cultivators, in Parganah Irádatnagar of Agra. Their origin is decidedly Brahmanical, but carpenters often include them in their own class.

Gond, گوند गोंड

The aboriginal inhabitants of the Saugor Territory, a simple primitive race, now chiefly confined to the hilly tracts, though some have been tempted to settle in the plains. Their great characteristics are a love of truth, drunkenness, and superstition. A writer in "Rushton's Gazetteer," (Vol. iv., Part 1), says :—

"To the north of Saugor, the representative of a royal household, styling themselves Raj Gonds, still exists in Bundelkhand, and is regarded with great deference by the scanty Gond population now to be found in that quarter. On the west, in the Bhopal Territory, similar traces of a formerly powerful dynasty are to be found, and acknowledged as such by the still considerable Gond Zamíndárs, Thakurs, and Rajas, who abound in the south of Saugor, and in Hoshangabad and Narsingpur: while as regards the whole of the eastern portion, the royal houses of Deogarh, Balaghat (or Chandwara), and Garha-Mandla retained more or less sway until a very recent period, the representative of the former being at present a pensioner of the Nagpur Government, and that of the latter, of the British.

"In the western portion, or Saugor, it would appear that the Gonds were subjected by a tribe named Dangi, to which the present chief of Shahgarh belongs, and of the ruling house of which the representative still exists at Bilehra of Saugor. These were, in their turn, subdued by the Bundelas, from whom the territory passed to the Peshwa.

"The Gonds included amongst them several different sections: the Baiyas, who are very generally regarded as sorcerers, living apart from all, in solitary habitations, in the most dense forests, where they clear spaces with their axes, and sow their grain, without further labour, in the ashes left after the felled timber has been burned ; but subsisting, for the most part, on the roots and fruits of the forests (with which they are especially familiar), the wild honey, or the beasts of game, which, in some parts, they occasionally destroy with bows and poisoned arrows :—the Bhumias, a nearly similar and almost equally wild race, without whose consecration a village is not considered habitable or safe from tigers, and who are universally the referees in all disputes regarding boundaries and established usages amongst these tribes :—the Purdhans, who preside at their orgies, are their beggars and bards, and unquestionably the most roguish and worthless part of their community :—the Patharis, who greatly assimilate to the latter ; with some other divisions.”

* * I here subjoin some information about these tribes, abridged from the late Rev. Mr. Hislop’s recently published papers, containing much that was not known in the days when Sir H. Elliot wrote :—

“The Gonds and Konds are closely connected, and the name is probably derived from the Telugu kondā, ‘a mountain.’ They live in the mountain ranges lying between $18^{\circ} 40'$ and $23^{\circ} 40'$ N. latitude, and between 78° and $82^{\circ} 30'$ E. longitude. This corresponds with the old Muhammadan division of Gondwāna ; but the Mughal geographers appear to have confounded them with the Kols, and not to have been aware of their connection with the Khonds of Bastār and Kalahandi.

“In the North they are met with about Saugor and near the source of the Hasdo ; on the East they cross that river into Sargujá, where they border on the Kols, and are found with Konds and Uriyas in Navagaddá, Kariál, and Kalahandi ; in the South they form the mass of the population of Bastār, and a portion of the inhabitants of Jaypúr (in the Madras Presidency), while they occupy the hills about the left bank of the Godávarí about Nirmal ; and on the West they are intermingled with the Hindus of Berar for thirty miles from the right bank of the Warda and along the Kúrrs, extend along the hills, both North and South of the Narbaddá, to the meridian of Hindia, where they give place to the Bhils and Nahals."

They are divided into twelve and a half classes—Ráj Gond, Raghuwál, Dandave, Katulyá, Pádál, Dholi, Ojhyál, Thotyál, Koilabhutál, Koikopál, Kolám, Mádyál, and a low Pádál as a half-caste. The first four, with the addition, by some, of the Kolám, are the highest and purest Gonds, and are called Koitor.

The Ráj Gonds have supplied the chief royal families, and live in Nagpúr, Berár, and the jungles South of the Wardá, as well as those North of the Narbaddá. The Raghuwál and Dadave are near Chindwara. These three are agricultural, eat together, but do not intermarry. The Katulyá are few, and scattered. They ape Hinduism, and are often received into that faith, and marry the daughters of needy Rajputs. Like all proselytes, they are over-zealous. The Raja of Khazradad is now a Hindu. They all go in for being Rajputs when converted.

The Pádál is also called Páthádi, Pardhán, and Desi ; they live near and among the Ráj Gonds, to whom they act as spiritual guides (प्रधान). They are also bháts, or bards. The Dholís, so called from the ढोला dholá, or drum which they beat, are musicians, and attend at feasts : there is a sub-caste of them called Nagárchis (from the kettledrum), also known as Chherkya in the jungle districts, where they are employed as goatherds. Their wives act as midwives. The Ojhyáls are wandering bards, who play on castanets and bells, which they make themselves.

The Thotyál or maimed, also called Penda bariá, or minstrels of God, are wandering singers, who play a tambourine ; they also make baskets ; their women are great at simples, and practise physic. This caste knows charms against small-pox (mátá), whence it is sometimes called Matyál. They like to be called Thákur.

Koilábhutáls are wandering dancers, the men pimps and the women prostitutes. The Koikopáls are settled cowkeepers: the word is derived from Koi, i.e. Gond, and Kopál, i.e. Gopal.

The Madya Gonds are wilder than the others, and in some parts, as in the Beiládilá Hills, they are perfectly savage. The men wear very little clothing, and always carry battle-axes. The women in the more remote districts wear no clothing at all, only a bunch of leafy twigs before and behind hung from a string round the waists. (J.A.S.B., xxv., p. 295.) Bachelors live in a common house in the villages. They fly at the approach of strangers, even of their own race if not of the same tribe. Their tribute to the Raja of Bastar is paid in kind, and is collected by an official "who beats a tomtom outside the village, and forthwith hides himself, whereupon the inhabitants bring out whatever they have to give." Their ceremonies are very peculiar and curious, and have nothing in common with Aryan popular customs. They are too long to detail here.

The Koláms extend all along the Pindi Hills to the South of the Wardá river, and along the table land extending East and North of Manikgad, and thence South to Dántanpalli, running parallel to the Western bank of the Pranhítá. They do not intermarry with the common Gonds, but eat together and dress alike. The Koláms worship Bhimsen, and have the custom, common in other nations, of pretending to carry off their brides by force.

The Gonds in general wear the dhoti, or waist-cloth, and a small kerchief on their heads. The better classes also wear a scarf (angwastra) on their shoulders. The women wear a lower garment tucked up so as to expose the thighs and legs, and a sári, or cloth like a sash, over the breast and back, and are loaded with jewels and tattooed. Their religion is to a great extent un-Aryan.—B.

Gondá, گونڈا गोंडा
See Ahír.

Gwál or Gwálá, گوالا or گوال ग्वाल or ग्वाला*

A Cowherd.—See Ahír. They do not appear to acknowledge any subdivisions in these parts, but in Behar there are several, as Bihota, Banárasya, Kanaujia, and Chautáhá.†

Gújar, گوجر गूजर

A very numerous clan in the N. Western Provinces, formerly notorious for their thieving propensities, but gradually becoming more addicted to habits of peaceful industry. Their importance may be rated by their having given names to the provinces of Guzerat on the western coast of India, and to Gujráť and Gujránwálá in the Panjab. They are sometimes considered to be among the aborigines of India, and have been so reckoned by Tod, who somewhat inconsistently declares them also to be a tribe of Rajputs. Sir R. Jenkins says that in the Nagpur Territory they consider themselves to be Rajputs, and that, as they are descendants from Lava, Rama's second son, they have an undoubted right to be so considered. In these provinces, however, they do not aspire to so high an origin, contenting themselves generally by saying their ancestors on the male side were Rajputs, who had united themselves with women of inferior lineage. Thus the Ráwal Gújars of Panípat say that they are descended from a Khokhar Rajput (a clan which has been considered to be the same as the notorious Ghakkar); the Chhokar from a Jadon; the Chamáyín from a Túar; the Kalsian of Kaírana, and the Maví, from a Chauhán; the Pílwan from a

* Sanskr. गोपाल cowherd.

† In parts of Behar Gwála and Ahír are convertible terms; and all the remarks under Ahír will therefore apply to them.—B.

Púndír; the Ádhaná from a Badgújar; and the Bhattí from Raja Kansal, a Bhattí Rajput from Jaisalmír.

The Gújars are spread all over the Dehli Territory, the Upper Doáb, and Upper Rohilkhand, and enumerate eighty-four different tribes.* In Dehli, the chief tribes are the Chamáyín, Khatána, Kháre, Barsoí, Chhokar, and Rawál. In the Doáb,—Sukal, Baisalí, Máví, Ráthí, Bhattí, Kasauní, Balesar, Dede, Jindhar, Pílwan, Batar, Adhaná, Cheche, Kalsían, Rámáyan, Nagrí, Chhotkaná, Badkána, Kasaná, Rausá, Khúbar, Múndan, Kadáhan, Tauhar, Gorsí, and Kanáná. In Rohilkhand,—Batár, Khúbar, Khare, Jatlí, Motlá, Surádná, Púrbar, Jindhar, Mahainsí, and Kasane. All these tribes intermarry on terms of equality, the prohibited Gots being only those of the father, mother, and paternal and maternal grandmother.

A great part of the district of Saháranpúr was called Gujrát during the last century. By the Gújars themselves it was said to consist of three parts, and the division is not only known amongst them to this day, but is usually adopted in ordinary converse. The Khádar, or tract which extends from the upland as far as the Ganges, was called Ghar. From the upland to the Jumna, running along the skirts of the town of Saháranpúr, and maintaining a high name for productiveness, was called Rutolá. Almost all the rest of the district, from the Ganges to the Jumna, was called Gujrát proper; the small parganah of Kata only excepted. Gujrát extended down to Kairanah and Jhinjanah, and included Gahgoh, Lakhnautí, Nanauta, and Títron. A part of this tract, tenanted by Khubars, was known also as Badanon, a name affixed by themselves, in order to feed their vanity of being reputed men either of lofty stature, or eminent in war or council. Their common estimate of 125,000 subordinate villages within Gujrát must vanish when it comes to be examined. Three thousand is the utmost they could have possessed. They might perhaps have doubled that, had they included the tract they called Taliáyin, which extended from Hastinapúr and Baisúma, in a semicircle to the south of Mírut, up to Bagput. The Gújars of this tract were rather despised, chiefly because they shaved, and did not live in such a lordly fashion. The tract opposite to Dehli, from Loni to Kasnah, was called Bhatner, from the prevalence of the Bhattí Gújars.

* In a pencil note the author quotes a Lt. Robinson as stating that Musulman Gújars are found in Chach Hazara, on the Indus, in Swat, Yusufzai, and on Mahában; also in Bonair. They are all zamíndárs, and state that they came from the Province of Gúzerat, by way of Vazirabad, in the Panjáb. They do not intermarry much with other tribes.—E. add.

Gújars are rarely found to the eastward of Aligarh in any numbers; but crossing the Jumna, we find them in Kunch and the northern parts of Bundelkhand, and the independent state of Sampter is ruled by a Gújar chief. There are many also near the Chambal and the Narbaddá. The Gújars, like the Játs, all state that they came from the west country into these parts. Many have been converted to the Mahomedan religion. Upon conversion they are generally styled Thatthar by their brethren of the ancient faith.*—E.

* * Gújars are also found in large quantities as far west as the Indus. Those in the Panjáb are all Musulmans. As to their origin, the most probable story is that which makes them a cross between Rajputs and Ahírs.† Their habits are more pastoral than agricultural; and I have heard their name derived from gau, a cow, and char (of charná), to graze. I do not accord much credit to this derivation, but it is remarkable that the province of Guzerat, which seems to have been their first abode, lies between the Rajput province of Malwa, etc., and Sindh, where the Abhiri, who are supposed to be the Ahírs, formerly lived. That they are aborigines is clearly disproved by their fine manly Aryan type, in which they closely resemble the Játs, who are constantly found as their neighbours. Gujarát in the Chaj Doáb, Gujaránwálá in the Rechna, and Gújar Khan in the Sindh Sagar, are named after them ; the former is an ancient city which gives name to a district, and was re-built in A.D. 1588 by the Gújars.—B.

* This is probably only a local term in Panipat.—E. add.

† General Cunningham considers that the Gújars are the same as the Tochari, alias Yuchi, alias Kushán, alias Kaspiroci, alias Thogarii, alias Kuei-Shwang, alias Korson, Korsea, Khoransu, or Korano. This remarkable tribe were, it would seem, originally Tartars, but by a series of events, related apparently by Chinese, Muhammadan, and Greek historians, they were led to give their name to Khorasan; also to Gurjjara-ráshtra, the modern Guzerat. It is sufficient merely to mention these speculations: those who care to read them will find them at pp. 25-29 of Part IV. of the General's report.—B.

Gújar-gaur, گوجرگور गूजरगौर
See Gaur Brahman.

Gaurá, گورا गौरा
A tribe of Ahírs, q.v.

Gaur brahman, گوڑ برهمن गौड ब्रह्मन

These form one of the ten tribes of Brahmans. They all state that they came from Gaur in Bengal, but there is much improbability in the story. There can be little doubt of Kanaujas emigrating on the invitation of Adiswara from Kanauj to Bengal ; how then can we account for the whole tribe of Gaurs not only leaving their native seats, but crossing through the country of the Kanaujas, and dwelling on the other side of them ? If they emigrated in or about the time of the Pándavas, as universal local tradition would induce us to suppose, it would lead to the inference that Kanaujas are a more modern race. Gaur, moreover, was only made the Bengal capital shortly before the Mahomedan conquest, and that is too late to admit of its giving a name to one of the ten tribes. Mr. Colebrooke seems to help us out of this difficulty by saying that Gaur is not the Mahomedan capital, but a Des, or country below Patna; but admitting this, the difficulty would still occur, how they came to overleap the Kanaujias? and how happens it that all the Gaur Brahmans now in Bengal are very recent importations from the West? There is ample room for speculation, and it may, perhaps, amongst other things, be conjectured, that the Ta-Gauria, mentioned by Polybius, which Wilson, in his excellent work on “Ariana Antiqua,” says affords some indications of Gaur, may be found to have something to do with their “incunabula,” at any rate, if their connexion with it could be proved, it would solve the chief difficulty respecting their present Western position. A fuller examination of the point might result in important discoveries respecting the origin of the Brahmanical tribes.—See Gaur Tagá.

We find Gaur Brahmans throughout the Súbah of Dehli, extending from Rampúr to Hariana, and from Aligarh to the Hills. They appear in general a more ignorant race than the Kanaujias, and can seldom be got to give an intelligible account of their own subdivisions; but it may be gathered that they amount to the number of forty-two. The most noted tribes of Gaur Brahmans are the Adh, Júgad, Kaithal, Gújar, Dharam, and Sidh Gaur.*

Gaur káyath, گور کايتھ गौड कायथ

One of the twelve sub-divisions of Káyaths. As their name implies, they are chiefly to be found in Bengal, though Násir-u'ddin, the son of Balban, introduced several of them into the Western Districts about 600 years ago, when he appointed them Kanúngoes of Nizamabad, Bhadoí, Kolí, Ghosí, and Chiriákot, in the Súbah of Allahabad.

There are two chief divisions of Gaur Káyaths—Kharri and

* The Jatimala gives six divisions: Gaur, Parfk, Bahínú, Khandelwál, Sarsut, Sundbel; but these are not all admitted by some Gaur.—E. add.

Nizamabadí. The latter are subdivided into Nizamabadí proper, Brahman Gaur, Uteara or Shumálí. To these perhaps may be added Bhat-gaur or Gaura-Bhatnagar; but on this subject authorities are not very clear.

The Nizamabadís are now for the most part Sikhs, or followers of Nanak Shah.—See Bhatnagar.

Gaur rájpút, گوڑا جیوت گौड़ राजपूत

One of the Chattís Kula, or thirty-six tribes of Rajputs. According to Colonel Tod* (Vol. I. p. 115), the ancient kings of Bengal were of this race, and gave their name to the capital Lakhnauti. There are several of this clan in these provinces. We find many of them as Zamíndárs in Majhaurí of Gorakhpúr; in Bundelkhand; in Bisauli, Nidhpúr, Badánw, Satásí, Usahat, Ujhaní, and Saheswan in Zillah Badaon; in Powayin,

* It is difficult to say on what authority he makes this assertion. Gaur is generally supposed to have been founded by one of the Physician Dynasty of Bengal, not long before the Mahomedan invasion; though it must be confessed that Dow and Rennel state that it was the capital of Bengal 730 years before Christ. As another illustration of the unsubstantial theories entertained by this enthusiastic annalist, it may be mentioned that he considers the Gaur to be descendants of Bahrám Gaur, who is said, in some apocryphal histories, to have visited India in the fifth century, and to have left progeny there by a princess of Kanauj. In a subsequent passage, he has no doubt that the Gaur appanage was West of the Indus, and that this tribe, on conversion, became the Ghor, and returned to India as the Ghorí Kings of Dehli (Annals, Vol. I., p. 233; Vol. II., p. 449).

While, however, we cannot but dissent from several of the author's extravagant surmises and assertions, it would be ungracious not to acknowledge how deeply we are indebted to him for his interesting "Annals of Rajasthan," a work which contains much novel information, and is a repertory of important facts and traditions, which are invaluable to an enquirer into the history of India previous to the Mahomedan invasion. He would have conferred a still deeper obligation on us had he published his promised translation of the poem of Chand Bardai. A perfect copy of the original is now rarely procurable, even in the best native libraries.—E.

I have procured two copies, and am about to publish an edition and translation of this interesting poem.—B.

Zillah Shahjehanpur; in Sambhal and Sirsá, Zillah Moradabad; in Aonla, Zillah Bareilly; and in Chibramau, Shamsabad, Alipúr Patti, Phaphúnd, Dehli, Bilhour, Akberpúr, Rasúlabad, Ghátampúr, and Dera Mangalpúr, in Central Doáb. In Khairabad of Oudh, they are found in considerable numbers. They gave great trouble in the time of Burhánú'l-mulk, Saádat Khan, and at last met with severe retribution.—(Imádu's Saádat.)

Tod gives the names of five "Sachæ" of Gaurs, which do not at all correspond with those known in these provinces. Here they are divided into three classes, called Bhat Gaur, Báman Gaur, and Chamár Gaur,—names derived from some intercourse with Bhats, Brahmans, and Chamárs. To these are sometimes added Katherya Gaurs, descended from a Katheri, or carpenter; but it may be doubted if the Katherya are really Gaurs. No argument, however, can be derived from the fact that the daughters of Gaurs marry into Katherya families, because the Chamár Gaur and Báman Gaur also intermarry.

The Chamár Gaur, who are subdivided into Rajas and Raís, rank the highest, which is accounted for in this way. When troubles fell upon the Gaur family, one of their ladies, far advanced in pregnancy, took refuge in a Chamár's house, and was so grateful to him for his protection, that she promised to call her child by his name. The Bhats and Brahmans, to whom the others fled, do not appear to have had similar forbearance, and hence, strange as it may appear, the subdivisions called after their name rank below the Chamár Gaur.

The Chamár Gaur themselves say their name is properly Chaunhar Gaur, from a Raja who was called Chaunhar. Sometimes they say their real name is Chiman Gaur, and that they are called after a Muni, whose name was Chiman. The fact is, they are ashamed of their name, as it presumes a connexion with Chamárs, which they are anxious to disclaim.

The strongest clan of Gaur is in the Central Doáb. They say that they came from Narnaul, from which place Nar in Rasúl-abad, the residence of a Gaur Raja, derives its name.*

Gaur tagá,

گور تگا गौड़ तगा

An important tribe, of Brahmanical descent, in the north-west of India, extending over a great part of Upper Rohilkhand, the Upper Doáb, and the Dehli Territory. They are a tribe of peculiar interest, from the traditions which attach to their occupation of their present seats. They state that they were invited from Bengal to these parts by Raja Janamejaya,† for the purpose of exterminating snakes; which fable, though sufficiently ridiculous in itself, no doubt veils under an allegorical type a most important historical fact. The circumstances attending the sacrifice of the snakes by Janamejaya are preserved in local tradition in almost precisely the same form as they are given in the “Adi Parva” of the Mahábhárata. A garrulous old Tagá, who has perhaps never read a line of that sacred poem, will tell you how that Raja Paríchit (Parikshita) was bitten to death by a snake, notwithstanding all the precautions he took to avoid it, by seating himself on a platform in the centre of the Ganges; how that Atang (Atanka), a Muni, persuaded Janamejaya, who had lately returned victorious from Takshasila, to avenge his father’s death; how that Janamejaya determined on having a Hom, or sacrifice, of the entire race of snakes; how that they were all exterminated except Takchak (Takshaka, brother of the Adityas) and Basuk (Vasuki, sove-

* The Rajas of Suket, Kishtawar, Mandí and Keonthal, in the Himalayas, between Simla and Kashmir, are all Gaur Rajputs. He of Suket is a Chamár Gaur. They all state that their families came originally from Bengal.—E. add. He also refers to Tod, I., 115, 233; II., 449. Buchanan, II., 613, 728; and III., 42, 68, 154. Burnouf, Bud. Ind. I., 632. Raja Taranginí, I., 488, 508. J.A.S.B., Jan. 1847, p. 18.

† The same tradition is preserved in Bengal also.—See “Buchanan’s Eastern India,” Vol. III., pp. 42 and 154.

reign of the Nagas of Patala); when, towards the close of the sacrifice, Astik, a holy man (of whose birth some marvellous particulars are given), came forward, and obtained the promise of Janamejaya to spare their lives, which promise he dare not break, as it was exacted by a Brahman; and how that he was thus foiled in his object of sacrificing the chief offenders, whom he had reserved for the close of the ceremony, in order that none of their followers might come to their assistance.

The extent to which this tradition of the serpent-sacrifice (Sarpa Satra) has spread is very surprising. Here we not only have it preserved by the common people of the north-west, the very scene of the operation, but in inscriptions and legends from distant parts of India. Thus, in the “Asiatic Researches” (Vol. IX.) we have an inscription from a copper-plate found at Bednor, which purports that Janamejaya made a progress to the south and to other quarters, for the purpose of reducing all countries under his dominion, and performed a sacrifice for the destruction of serpents at the confluence of the rivers Tanga-bhadra and Haridra, at the time of a partial eclipse of the sun. Having completed the sacrifice, the king bestowed gold and lands on certain Brahmans of Gautama Grāma,—a name evidently of Buddhist origin. Though the genuineness of this monument is distrusted by Colebrooke and Colonel Mackenzie, they both concur in thinking it no recent fabrication. If it is forged, it must of course have been drawn up in conformity with notions and traditions generally current on the spot. Again, Stirling (“Report on Orissa,” p. 25) says that the Brahmans of Agrahat, eight miles north of Kaṭak (Cutlack), state that the spot was visited by Janamejaya during his progress over India with all the feudatory princes of the country in his train; and they “point out the spot where he performed the sacrifice for the destruction of the serpents.”—See also “J.A.S.B.,” September, 1837.

It can scarcely be doubted that these serpents, for whose annihilation so much trouble was taken, were Takshak Scythians of the Buddhist persuasion, and the chief supporters of that religion. From the time of the Great War, when we find them already in the north-west, to about 500 B.C., they extended their conquests in India; and, as they had a serpent for their national emblem, they were known as the Takshak, or serpent race. There can be no question also that the early legends of Persia are to be interpreted with this key, and that the voracious snakes of Zakhak were hordes of barbarous Scythians from the north.

The period of their chief, though perhaps not their first, invasion of India, under their leader Sahesrag, occurred about 600 B.C. Many memorials of the bloody wars in which the Hindus were engaged with these invaders exist in the records of Indian history. They extended their usurpations to the Magadha Empire of Behar, the throne of which was held by the Nag, or Serpent dynasty for ten generations, and a branch of them, the Nagbansí chieftains of Ramgarh Sirgúja, have ("Trans. R. A. Society," Vol. ii. p. 563), the lunettes of their Serpent ancestor engraved on their signets in proof of their lineage,—while the capital and district of Nagpúr are called after their name. The Vayu and Matsya Paranas call the Saisanagas, Kshatra Bandhís, which may designate, says Wilson ("Vishnu Pur.," p. 467), an inferior order of Kshatriyas. The use of the title serves to show that they had already begun to be included in the military class, and is confirmatory of the view that they are included in the Agnikula. The invasion above-mentioned was, according to Colonel Tod's supposition, nearly contemporaneous with the appearance of the 23rd Buddha, Parisnath, whose symbol is that of the race he accompanied, and hence he is called Sahasphann, "the thousand-hooded." It is supposed that the Brahmans made converts of some powerful branches of these new sectaries, and that it is to them the term Agnikula (fire-race) is applied, as signifying their spiritual regeneration by the element of fire. If so, the Takshaks must be the progenitors of the most distinguished tribe of Rajputs; and yet it is strange that no vestiges are now to be found of the original name Tak,* or Takshaks, though it is recorded amongst the thirty-six royal races. I am aware that Elphinstone ("History of India," Vol. i., App. ii.) opposes the doctrine of a Scythian admixture with the Rajputs; but there is much in Indian history which could not well be explained without it, at least without the admission of an incorporation of some northern family, and even he is disposed to concede the point with regard to the Játs.—See also "J.A.S.B.," Vol. vi. p. 677.

* It may be remarked that Tak is one of the sub-divisions of the Bhangis, but they are not likely to be in any way connected with our Rajput Taks.

There is also a community of Tank Rajputs in Gihror of Mainpúri, and in the South of Rohilkhand. They trace their origin from Tank Tora in Karaolí, and receive the daughters of Baman Gaur, Chamar Gaur, Gahlot, and Dhákara in marriage, which would argue them to be of respectable lineage. The probability of their connexion with the Tak race will be further discussed under the article Tank.

It is also to be observed that Takshak is still one of the Gram Deotas, or village gods, of the Bhagalpúr district.

The "Mirát-i Sikandari" says the tribe was called Tak, because it became Tyági, or separated from its brethren: ascribing, therefore, the same origin to the name as is given to our Tagas.

سدهارن از قوم تاک است در تاریخ هندو مسطور است که تاک و
کھتری برادران یکدیگراند یکی از ایشان بشرب شراب رغبت نمود
اورا کھتریان از قوم خویش اخراج نمودند و چنین مخرجی را بزبان
هندي تیاگی گویند یعنی از قوم برآورده شده از آن باز رسم و آئین
و دین کھتری از تاک امتیاز یافت

The translation of the passage is as follows:—"Sidhāran is of the Tak tribe. In the Histories of India it is written that Tak and Khattri are brothers; one of them took to drinking, and the Khattris expelled him from their tribe, and an expelled person is, in the Indian language, 'tyági.' From that time the customs and laws and religion of the Khattris differed from those of the Tak."—B.

This spiritual regeneration must have occurred three or four centuries subsequent to the allegorical tradition mentioned above, which evidently implies that the edict of extermination was not entirely fulfilled, and that Janamejaya was induced to forego his purpose at the instigation of Astik, who, according to the "Mahábhárata," was the son of Takshak's own sister; so that intermarriages with the Takshaks could not have been altogether uncommon even in the Court of King Janamejaya.

It is evident that we are to construe in a similar way those frequent allusions in the "Mahábhárata" and the "Puranas" to the intercourse between mortal heroes and the Nága Kanyas, or Serpent nymphs. For instance, when it is mentioned that an Apsara from Naglok was married to Chatrgupt, and that more than half the Kayaths of the country are the offspring of this union, and when it is mentioned that the seventeen daughters of Basuk, the king of the Nágas, were married to the seventeen sons of Raja Agarsen, we are to understand that a nuptial alliance united a Scythian family with that of Chatrgupt and Raja Agarsen. Those who, like the Agarwala Banias, are descended from the Raja, would not willingly acknowledge this interpretation, as they would rather adhere to the fable; but it need not alarm them, for a little examination would show that, even as it is, they cannot be pure Vaisyas, since the Raja was himself a Kshatriya. In a similar manner, almost all the mercantile tribes of Hindustan are of Rajput descent. But these anomalies do not appear to strike the credulous Hindu, and he is content to leave the subject without enquiry.

It was for the purpose of officiating at the serpent sacrifice above-mentioned, that Janamejaya is said to have invited Brahmans from Gaur. After they had performed all that he requested of them, he offered them remuneration, which some rejected, and others received in the shape of land; on which account they are called Tagas, from having consented to a Tyág (relinquishment) of their creed as Brahmans, by pursuing agriculture, which they are forbidden by the Shasters to practice.

Those who continued to retain their titles and privileges as Brahmans—(See Gaur Brahman)—took up their abode chiefly in Hariana, while the Tagas remained in the immediate neighbourhood of Hastinapúr, within a circle of about one hundred miles round the ancient capital, where they are found to this day. This is the usual account. It is remarkable, however, that almost all the clans of Tagas state that they came from Hariana, not from Gaur, and even derive their names from places in that country, as, for instance, the Chulat, who say that their name is derived from Chúlú in Bikanír, and the Bikwans of Púr Chapár, who came from Bikanír. It is therefore far more probable that the Brahmans were already tenants of Hariana, that they must have settled there before Janamejaya's reign, and that the Tagas only, not the Brahmans, owe their residence to that powerful Raja; otherwise it is difficult to reconcile the apparent contradiction that he called Gaur Brahmans from Bengal, and Gaur Tagas from Hariana; or it may be, that the Brahmans were invited from Gaur by Janamejaya, and afterwards settled in Hariana; and that the Tagas were invited by some succeeding prince or princes, after the Brahmans had fully established themselves in Hariana; so that the occupation of the country round Hastinapúr by the Tagas may be later than the occupation of Hariana by the Brahmans. But what militates against this, and confirms the other hypothesis is, that it is expressly stated in the concluding section of the "Mahábhárata" that Janamejaya, "having concluded the ceremonies of the sacrifice on which he had been engaged, dismissed the multitude of Brahmans, and other pious mendicants who had thronged to the place, loaded with presents, to their several abodes."

There are some Tagas in the Upper Doáb, who state that they do not proceed from the Gaur stock. For instance, on the banks of the Doáb Canal, near Dehli, there are a few villages held by Tagas of Sirsútí Brahman descent. With this exception, it is generally acknowledged that all the Tagas were originally Gaur Brahmans.

They are divided into several separate clans, amongst which some of the most important are Mungal, Títwal, Mahesara, Basian, Dattian, Karáwal, Makta, Dikhit, Aimlí, and Dabhe.

There are several Mahomedan converts among them, particularly in the line of country between Mírat and Moradabad.

In the Dehli Territory the Gaur Brahmans and Tagas frequently intermarry, but the practice is not observed by the Gaurs of the Doáb and Rohilkhand.—E.

* * There is, doubtless, in the legends of the early Aryans much that is obscure on the subject of their connection with the Nágas, or serpent race. Any speculations here would be out of place, as Mr. Fergusson has just published a magnificent work on this subject, which will be found to contain valuable information. As, however, Gen. Cunningham has many notices about a tribe which may, or may not, be allied to the above, I give an abstract of them, without in the least committing myself to approval of the General's opinions (which appear to me to be in many cases ill-founded), because in the dearth of information on the subject of castes, it is useful to collect all that has been written, with a view to the ultimate sifting of the mass when the proper time shall come.*

* What a pity it is that our Indian savants so habitually neglect the proper division of all philosophical enquiry into its two great branches: first, the collection of facts; next, the induction from a sufficient quantity of collected and ascertained facts! We are really, at present, as regards the pre-Muhammadan history of India, only in the first of these stages, and we have not yet collected half our facts. It is much to be desired that our learned workers in this school would abstain for the present entirely from making deductions, which only our grandsons will be in a position to make, and devote themselves solely to collecting facts, for which they have still ample scope. We are not yet ripe for Indian Niebuhrs: we are still in the age of Scaliger and Reuchlin.—B.

The Takkas are denominated by the above-named writer “early Turanians,” and he ascribes to them a connection with “the famous city of Takkasila or Taxila.” They were formerly, he thinks, in possession of the Sindh Ságar Doáb, or the country between the Indus and Jhelum rivers in the Panjáb, but must have been expelled thence by the Gakkars (who are also said to be Turanians) during the reign of Darius Hystaspis, or thereabouts. The reason for this supposition would seem to be that “in the first century of our era, the district of Taxila was already called Amanda or Amandra, a name which at once recalls the Awáns of the present day and their country Awánkári.” In another place (p. 8) the Awáns are said to have been in possession of Taxila at the time of Alexander’s invasion, and to have been expelled by the Indo-Scythians two centuries later. These speculations, however, are confessedly rather uncertain, and some confusion exists in this part of the report. The curious custom mentioned by Q. Curtius, and by Fa-Hian, the Chinese traveller (A.D. 400), as prevalent among the people of Taxila, of entertaining guests for three days, and obliging them to depart on the fourth, is adduced to show that the same people occupied that site from the time of Alexander to that of Fa-Hian, a period of seven hundred years.

Attok is also supposed to recall the name of the Takkas. Rashídu’d dín calls it the fort of Tankur, which with the Arabic article (التنكور at-tankúr) is said to have suggested to Akbar the name Attok (Aṭak) meaning obstacle. Though I strongly doubt this supposition, it is certain that the name was given by Akbar. The Játs in the Gujráť district of the Panjáb have a legend that they were Rajputs, and lost caste by crossing the Indus, which the others refused to do. They were taunted, says the story, by Akbar, in the following verse :—

सारा भू गोपाल का है ।
ता में अटक कहाँ ॥

जा के मन में अटक है ॥

ता में अटक रहा ॥

“All the earth is God’s: In it where is there any hindrance?

He in whose mind there is a barrier, in that (alone) is the hindrance.”*

“In A.D. 900 we find the district of Takkadesa forming part of the kingdom” of Gujrát “when Raja Sankara Varmma of Kashmír, who reigned from A.D. 883 to 901, annexed it to his own dominions. At that time Takkadesa must have been situated to the north or north-east of Gujrát, towards Kashmír. Now this is the very position where we find the Takkas of the present day, namely, in the hilly country on both banks of the Chenab, within the Jammu territory” (p. 4). This would seem to me to be conclusive against the identity of Takkadesa with Taxila, as the General himself fixes the latter in the north-western part of the Sindh Ságar Doáb, at Shahdheri, near Kála Sarái.

There are also Táks in Sindh who are connected with the Panjábí Takkas, a chief of whom held the fortress of Aser in Rájwára, and is stated to be mentioned by Chand under the name of Chátá Ták, and to have been wounded at Kanauj. “Two centuries later one Sárang Ták became the first Muhamadan king of Gujrát under the name of Muzaffar Shah” (ib.)

These Takkas and Taks are said to have been descended from Takshaka, the founder of the Nágas, or serpent race; and the legend of Paríkshita’s death by the bite of a snake may be interpreted as showing a conflict between the Pándavas and the Takkas of the Panjáb, in which the latter were victorious. “This event may be dated about 1400 B.C.”

These Takkas are considered to have originally peopled Kash-

* I quote this verse from memory, from the valuable manuscript Settlement Report of the district, by Captain Hector Mackenzie, which is a perfect storehouse of curious legendary and other information. I do not know if it has yet been published.—B.

mír, where serpent-worship prevailed till the time of Kanishka, about the beginning of the Christian era, who introduced Buddhism ; but shortly after his death the Nága sacrifices and ritual were re-established by Gonarda II. There was a Nága king named Durlabha in Kashmír in the seventh century, who established a dynasty.

On the whole there appears to be no valid reason, in the present state of our knowledge, for supposing the Takkas to be anything but low Aryans. The arguments adduced at p. 5 of the Report prove nothing at all.—B.

Gauráhar,

گوراهر गौराहर

An obscure tribe of Rajputs in Saheswan, and in Gangerí, Pachlánah, Badarea, and Bilram, on the borders of Badaon and Aligarh. They are said to be descended from the Chamár Gaur, and it is sometimes added, by way of reproach, that there is a little Ahír blood in their veins.

Gauruá,

गुरा गौरुआ

An inferior clan of Rajputs in Rehar, and Nagína of Bijnor ; Irádatnagar of Agra ; and Sahár, Shergarh, and Hazúr Tahsíl of Mathura. Those to the west of the Jumna are said to have emigrated from Jaypúr about nine hundred years ago. They are frequently confounded with the Gauráhars, but are, in fact, quite distinct.

Gautam rájpút,

گوتم راجپوت गौतम राजपूत

This tribe is now usually rated among the Chandarbans ; but they are not considered as holding a place among the thirty-six royal races. There are a few of them in Bundelkhand and Benares, but they are found in large numbers in Ghazipur, Ayia Sah, Muttur, Kora, Kútia Gunír, and Bindkí, Parganahs of Fattihpúr ; Jajmau and Sarh-Salimpúr of Cawnpore ; in Islámnagar of Badaun; Deogáñw, Chiryakot, Kariat Mittú, and Nizamabad of Ázingarh: and in Máhul, Atraulia Tilhení, and Aurungabad Nagar of Gorakhpúr.

The Gautams were once a very powerful clan in the Lower Doáb. Their chief village was Argal on the Rinde in Parganah Kora, and their representative, now shorn of all his power, still resides there, and is honored with the title of Raja. They themselves state that they were originally Brahmans, that Siringí Rikh, their ancestor (so called from a prominent horn on his forehead), was invited to court by the Gaharwár Raja of Kanauj, who bestowed his daughter in marriage on Ingí Rikh, the son of Siringí, and accompanied the gift with the splendid dowry of all the villages from Kanauj to Karrá.

The tradition is good for nothing. It is, in the first place, impossible that Siringí Rikh could have been a contemporary of any Gaharwár Raja, and, in the second place, it is highly improbable that the Gaharwárs should have preceded the occupation of the Gautams. Nevertheless, the story is most devoutly believed by many Gautams. They are divided into the tribes Raja, Rao, Rana, and Rawat. The representative of the Rajas lives at Argal; of the Raos at Biráhanpúr, in Bindki; of the Ranas at Chillí, in Parganah Majháwan, now included in Sarh-Salímpúr; and of the Rawats at Bháúpúr, in Bindki.

Besides the possessions which they themselves retained, they are said—and here probability is in favour of the tradition—to have bestowed upon their allies several large tracts which are to this day tenanted by the grantees. Thus the Chandels of Sheorájpúr in Cawnpore are represented to have received from them sixty-two villages in that Parganah, having been induced to leave their original seat of Mahoba, after the defeat of their chief Brimaditya by Pirthí Ráj. The Jaganbansí Kanaujía Brahmans of Kora are said to have received the Chaudrahat of that Parganah from Birsingh Deo, a Gautam chieftain. The Thatbarár Kanaujía Brahmans are said to have been Bakhshís of the Argal family. The Athya Gautams, who are reckoned inferior to the general stock, and considered to have been originally Jinwar Rajpúts, are said to have received twenty-eight villages in Bindkí from the Argal Raja, with whom they had contrived to ingratiate themselves by teaching him the game of chess.

But the largest assignment of land which was attributed to their bounty is that of Baiswara, in Oudh. The reason of this gift is thus given by the traditions of the country. The Argal Raja, having given offence to some king of Dehli, the king directed his myrmidons to seize the Raja's wife, who was then on a pilgrimage at Allahabad. They were nearly succeeding in their attempt, when a large party of the Bais Rajputs from Múngí Paitan, who had come under their leaders Bhao and Bebhao to the sacred confluence, came forward to the rescue, and kept the royal army at bay till they reached Karra, when there was no longer any fear of danger. To mark the Rani's gratitude, the Bais were invited to Argal, and there, after a short time, a marriage was celebrated between Bhao and Gúrdandí, a Rajpútní of the Rao Gautam tribe. The Raja, though he considered it a humiliation to unite one of his own stock to the stranger, was nevertheless pleased to authorize a marriage with the Rao, and to bestow upon the Bais, as a dowry, 1,440 villages on the eastern side of the Ganges, which now constitute the country of Baiswara. The story goes that the Gautam Raja offered the bride all the villages of which she could pronounce the names without drawing breath. She accordingly commenced, and after reciting five lines of names, had proceeded so far as Panchgáñw, when the Raja's son, fearing that his possessions would be lost to him, seized hold of the bride's throat, and prevented further utterance.

If we are to put faith in the essentials of this tradition, it would shew that the Gautam country must really have been an important tract, extending from Kalpí to the neighbourhood of Gorakhpúr, since we find a Gautam Raja still residing, as head of his tribe, in Nagar in that district, and that the Azingarh family, now Musulmans, were, before their conversion, Rajputs of the Gautam stock. We find it also stated in Buchanan ("Eastern India," Vol. II. p. 458), that the Gautams of Gorakhpúr considered that their ancestors were once in possession of Bundelkhand. Though his statements are never to be taken without reservation, yet we may fairly receive them for the evidence of a tradition respecting the Gautams, which concur with that of their Western brethren in assigning to their ancestors the possession of a very large principality in and around the Lower Doáb.

It must be remembered that both the Gautam and Bais Rajputs concur in this story, and such a concurrence is almost equivalent to authentic history. Now, as the Bais are descendants of Salivahana, and a Salivahana was sovereign of Pratisthana, the modern Jhúsí ("Asiatic Researches," Vol. X. p. 32), it gives at once an established antiquity to the Gautams, which makes it possible that we may have in them the descendants of the illustrious Shakyas. There are of course difficulties* attending this hypothesis, but the bare mention of it raises questions of considerable interest, which invite a longer discussion than can be bestowed upon them here.

For some generations the Gautams of Argal seem by their own accounts to have continued in great prosperity, dating their decline from the period of Hamáyún's return to India, who avenged himself upon them for their zealous adherence to the cause of his victorious rival, Sher Shah. Musulman history,

* Il résulte de là qu'il n'est pas aisé de comprendre comment Shakya à pu porter à la fois ce nom, qui rappelle la tribu guerrière à laquelle il appartient, et celui de Gautama, qui rappelle une famille brahmanique. La seule manière de résoudre cette dernière difficulté, c'est d'admettre que le nom de Gautama a dû appartenir, non pas seulement à Shakya mouni seul, mais à toute la famille guerrière des Shakyas, comme le pensent les Chinois.—M. Burnouf, Foe Koue Ki, p. 309.

however, is silent on this subject, both of this warfare of extermination, and of the presumed importance of Argal and the Gautams, and it is therefore difficult to say what portions of truth are mixed up with the fictions of these relations.

The Gautams of Jaunpúr and the Eastward give their daughters in marriage to Sombansí, Bachgotí, Bajhalgotí, or Bandhalgotí, Rajwar, and Rajkúmar. Those of the Doáb give their daughters to other tribes, the Bhadauria, Kachhwáha, Rathor, Gahlot, Chauhán, and Túar, and they vary as much with respect to the tribes whose daughters they receive.

Gautamiyán, گوتمیان گौतमियां

A clan of Rajputs in Azimgarh and Gorakhpúr. They are offshoots of the Gautams, but of a spurious breed.

Gabr, گبر गबर

An infidel, in general; but the word is more specially applied to a fire-worshipper. Meninski says, "Ignicola, magus, infidelis, quivis paganus." The word is more familiar to us in Europe under the aspect of Guebre—the Parsee of Western India. There seems reason to suppose that there were colonies of refugee fire-worshippers established in Upper India also till a very late period. One of the governors of Mírat, even as late as the time of the capture of that town by Timúr in A.D. 1399, was of that persuasion; and though the "Rauzatu's Safá," the "Timúrnama," and "Zafarnama" mention him merely under the term of Gabr, which is also applied by them to Hindus in general, yet the "Mutlau's Sayyidín" distinctly says that his son worshipped fire; and the language of Khondemir in the third volume of the "Habíbu's Sair" is too plain to be mistaken on that point:—

وآخر ماه ربیع الآخر صاحب قران عالی مائر بدآتجا رسیده عساكر

منصور آغاز جنگ کردند و قهراً میرت را گرفته صفي گبر را در حین
قتال بزخم تیغ آبدار بدارالموار فرستادند و پسرش را بآتشی که می
پرستید سوزانیدند * اگر صد سال گبر آتش فروزد * چو یکدم اندر و
افتد بسوزد * غره ماه جمادی الاولی اکثر گبران انحصار بردست اهل
اسلام کشته گشته بروج قلعه مانند خاکِ راد دموار شد *

Gaddí, گدی गद्दी

A tribe resembling the Ghosís. They are now mostly Musulmans, and have a few scattered communities in several Parganahs, such as in Garhmuktesar and Sarawa of Mirat, and the Rampúr territory. It is not unusual to call any converted Hindú a Gaddí, which is looked on by a true Musulman as a term of reproach.

Gadariyá, گڈریا गडरिया

A shepherd. There are several sub-divisions of Gadariyás in these Provinces—Níkhār, Tasselha or Pachhade, Chak, Dhengár, Bareiya, Paihwar, and Bhaiyatar. Of each of these there are also many divisions, which are not worth recounting.

These hold no intimate communication with one another, being as much strangers as any two distinct castes. The most liberal relaxation of this social bondage being that the Níkhār and Dhengár smoke each others hukḡas.

* "And at the end of the month Rabú's-saní His Majesty arrived, and the army commenced the attack, and having taken Mirat, they sent to hell Safi, the Gabr, who had been wounded by a sword at the time of the slaughter, and burnt his son in the fire which he worshipped.

Though a Gabr kindle fire for a hundred years,

If he once fall into it he will burn.

On the first of Jamadi-ul-úla' most of the Gabrs of that fort fell into the hands of the Musulmans and were killed, and the fortress was levelled."—B.

As with the Játs and Gújars, so with the Gaḍariyás, the younger brother marries the elder brother's widow, but the elder brother is prohibited from forming a similar connection with the younger brother's widow.—See Karao in Part II.

Gaharwár,

گہروار गहरवार

A tribe of Rajputs found in Dera Mangalpúr, Bithúr, Jájmau, Kanauj, and Bilhaur in the Central Doáb; in Islámganj on the left bank of the Ganges; in Bundelkhand; in Gorakhpúr; in Katehar and the Hazúr Tahsíl of Benares; in Pachhotar and Mahaich of Ghazipur; in Khairagaṛh of Allahabad; and Kantit of Mirzapúr.

The Gaharwárs* of Khera Mungrore in Mirzapúr are converted to Mahomedanism, and those of Mahaich in Ghazipur are reckoned an inferior branch. The chief of the Gaharwárs resides at Bijaypúr, a few miles to the west of Mirzapúr, where the liberality of the British Government enables him still to keep up some show of respectability. At the time of our first occupation of Benares, he was a fugitive from the tyranny and oppression of the Gautam Bhúínhárs, who had expelled the Gaharwár family in 1758 A.D.

The Gaharwárs may be considered one of the most interesting races of the Upper Provinces, yet much obscurity hangs over their origin and lineage. They are recorded among the thirty-six royal tribes of Rajputs, and are said to be of the same family as the Rathors, with whom they deem themselves on an equality, and with whom it is said they never intermarry. But this is a mistake, for those of the Central Doáb and Gorakhpúr intermarry with Rathors, and the observation can only apply to the soi-disant regal family of Kantit. They are mentioned, moreover, in the “Prithiraja rásá,”

* The Jatimala in the “Hindí Selections” spells the name गहडवाड, but it seems more usual to spell it as in the text.

under the distinct appellation of Gaharwár. Thus, in the “Alhá-prastáv” * we read,

सज्जि गह्वार गोहिल अनेक

“Many Gaharwárs and Gohils were arrayed.”

So that they were acknowledged to be a separate tribe at the time of the final subjugation of Kanauj by the Mahomedans.

They assert that they were originally masters of Kanauj, local tradition confirms their claims, and the Gautam Rajputs attribute their own residence and possessions in the Lower Doáb to the bounty of a Gaharwár Raja of Kanauj. The “Ḥadiqat-ul-Akálím” states that they come from Benares, and settled at

* There is also very curious mention of them at the end of another Khand. Bīr bhadṛ is made to deliver the following prophecy respecting the future greatness of this family :—

ता पाछे पूरव देसीयं उपजै कोऊ नरेसीयं
 विंदासु चल मधिवासीयं वेद भेद उपासीयं
 कुल गहरवार सुमद्वियं नर्पमहीं हिंदूसद्दीयं
 हरिचंद निजुध की जातीयं प्रिथिराज तेज समातीयं
 धर्म राज विक्रम सूरियं सकबंध अवतर पूरियं
 फिरि जसो हिंदू अवतरे मिलि गहरवार सगोतरं
 धरिजीति सकति चलाई है हिंदूवान सर्व मिलाई है
 उन सिर तिलकु सी सै दियी दीसो पति साहदिल्ली की कियी
 जाँ छपन पंडव चापीयं त्यों गहरवार सुथापीयं

After saying that the Empire of India will be swayed by the Pathans, a Banya (?), the Moguls, and a hero from the Deccan (?), he states that the Gaharwárs will finally attain the sovereignty. But both the style and sentiment betray marks of modern interpolation; and the passage was no doubt written by some courtly poet of the holy city, when it was under the dominion or influence of the Gaharwár family.—E.

I leave this passage as it stands, because it is one of the few bits of Chand that have yet got into print. Every one talks about Chand, but few have really read his poem, which is very scarce. As to this extract, though it is manifestly incorrect, yet no correction of it can be attempted till a collation has been made of the original, which I hope to do shortly, as also to publish an edition and translation of the whole poem.—B.

Kantit, in A.D. 1155. Other authorities say that Gadan Deo (by some reckoned the son of Manik Chand, brother of Jay Chand, the Rathore) came from Kashmír, about the end of the same century, and after expelling the Bharpatwas, at that time the occupants of the southern bank of the Ganges, settled at Kantit, and assumed for himself and brethren the name of Gaharwár. Kashmír is most likely a mistake for Kási (Benares), which is generally considered to be their original country; and if so, the two reports would be nearly identical with respect to the place and time of emigration.* The probability, however, appears to be that the Gaharwárs preceded the five Rathore princes of Kanauj, and fled to their present seats, on the occupation of the country by the Rathores; or, it may be that, after living in subordination to, or becoming incorporated with, the Rathores, they were dispersed at the final conquest of Kanauj by Muhammad Ghorí.

What has chiefly puzzled the English historians of this eventful period is the name of Korah, which was borne by the Raja of Kanauj at the time of the invasion by Mahmúd of Ghazní. The Rauzatu's-safá calls him Jaipal, but the Habibu's-sair, the Táju'l-maasir, the Tabakát-i-Akbarí, and Ferishta call him Korah or Gorah.† Now it is not at all improbable that

* Colonel Tod, in the "Annals of Rajasthan" (Vol. I., 116), says, "The Gherwal Rajput is scarcely known to his brethren in Rajasthan, who will not admit his contaminated blood to mix with theirs. The original country of the Gherwal is in the ancient kingdom of Cassi. Their great ancestor was Khortaj Deva, from whom Jeponda, the seventh in descent, in consequence of some grand sacrificial rites performed at Bindabassi, gave the title of Búndela to his issue. Búndela has now usurped the name of Gherwal."—This is not correct. The Gherwals (Gaharwárs) have allowed no usurpation of their name by the Búndelas, and would consider the assumption very impertinent. The author, who admits the Gherwals into his own list of the thirty-six tribes, does not state what ground he has for considering their blood contaminated.

† Briggs, nevertheless, by some inadvertence, calls him, in his translation, Kúwar Rai.—Dow, more correctly, gives it Kora.

It may be here proper to mention the origin of the name Korah assigned in the

this was the designation of a tribe, and that tribe was Gaharwár, converted by a misapprehension of the Musulman historians into Korah or Gorah, which, with an entirely new language, character, and pronunciation, is not at all an unlikely transfiguration. If this supposition is correct, it would afford a very simple explanation of one of the chief historical difficulties of this period, and serve at the same time to confirm a local tradition which is adhered to with surprising pertinacity. It is not to be concealed that there would still be much requiring explanation; amongst other matters, the connection between the Rathores and the Gaharwárs is not easy to be accounted for, because inscriptions of the period show that Srí Chandra Deva, the Rathore, "conquered by his own arm the unequalled kingdom of Kanauj;" and it could therefore scarcely have been held by a kindred tribe before him, unless, indeed, he may have reconquered it, as a member of the Gaharwár family, from those who had usurped the dominion after the death of Jaipal, the Gorah, who was slain by the Raja of Kálinjar, in revenge for his too easy submission to the demands of Mahmúd. If this is allowed, and there is nothing to militate against it, it would sufficiently account for the Gaharwárs not fleeing to their new seats till the end of the eleventh century, and there would then be little to demand further explanation.*

Rathore genealogies. "The fourth grandson of Nayn Pal was Umrabhijai, who married the daughter of the Pramara prince of Koragarh on the Ganges, slew 16,000 Pramaras, and took possession of Korah, whence the Korah Camdhas." Korah, however, is not on the Ganges, and is evidently mistaken for Karra, which has still the remains of a large Rathore fort, known by the name of "Little Kanauj," and haunted by the undying Alá, one of the chief heroes of the popular songs and tales of Upper India.

* To show what difficulty attends the prosecution of this enquiry, it may be as well to add the Gorakhpúr traditions, as given in "Martin's Eastern India" (Vol. II., 458). One is, that the Gaharwárs are descended from the famous Raja Nala, and came to Kasi from Narwar, near Gwalior. Another is, that Baldeo, Raja of Kasi, was expelled from that town by a King of Maghada, and entered into the service of Tripura, King of Kashmír, from whom he contrived to seize the government of that

Gandhílá, گندھیلا गंधीला

A vagrant tribe, a few degrees more respectable than the Baorí, q.v.

Gandhú, گنڈھو गंढू

See Jat.

Gangáputr, گنگاپتر गंगापुत्र

A tribe of inferior Brahmans (literally, sons of the Ganges), found chiefly in Benares, Bithúr, and Sheorájpúr in Cawnpore. In the two latter Parganahs they hold several villages in proprietary right. They declare their descent from Kanaujias, and preserve the same sub-divisions, asserting that they assumed a distinctive name, merely because they receive gifts and assist at ablutions on the banks of the Ganges.

Gardezí, گردیزی गर्देजी

The name of a class of Sayyids in Jaula of Muzaffarnagar. They wish to claim connection with the Barah Sadat (q.v.), but they do not really belong to any of the four branches of that stock. The family has been somewhat ennobled of late by a member of it having been raised by adoption to the Masnad of Purneah.* In our own provinces there are few Gardezís, but country. His descendants enjoyed it for 121 generations, when they were expelled by the Kings of Ram, Turkestan, and Iran, and retired to Kanauj, which they held for fifty more generations till the time of Jai Chand. His third son, Banar, Raja of Kasi, was ancestor of the Gaharwár chiefs." It is not worth while to attempt to disprove this improbable legend.

See also "Bird's Guzerat," p. 34; and pp. 351-354, 358, 455, and 478 of Col. Sykes' admirable Essay on Ancient India, in the Journal of the R.A.S." No. xii.

* This is incorrect. Sayyid Reza Ali, a Gardezí, came to Puraniya (Purneah) in Eastern Behar, and married the daughter of Momin Ali, zamíndár of Parganahs Badaur and others in that district, and, on Momin Ali's death, succeeded to the estates in right of his wife, and still holds them, or rather did when I was at Purneah last year. There is, however, no title of Raja or Nawab attached to the estates, nor is there any Masnad in any sense, and the estates are twenty miles from Purneah.—B.

in Multan and the Westward there are several. According to the Manba'u-s Sádāt, the ancestor of the Gardezís of India is Mír Sayyid Shahábu-d dín, whose tomb is at Manikpúr.

Garg, گَرگ गर्ग

See Kanaujiya Brahman.

Gargbansí, گَرگ بنسی गर्गबंसी

Rajputs of this clan are found in Sagrí and Máhul of Azimgarh; and in Amorha, Rattanpúr Bansí, and Rasúlpúr Ghaur, of Gorakhpúr.—See Chanamia.

Gatwárá, گتوارا गटवारा

Gatwárá, or more correctly Ganthwárá, is the name of a tribe of Játs who hold villages in Gohana (where they are called Aolanía, after their chief town), in Sonípat Bangar, and in the Doáb, on the opposite side of the Jumna. They trace their origin from Ghazní, from which place they were accompanied by the Bhat Búrdia, the Dom Sám̐p, the Brahman Shawál, the Barber Bajwáín, and the Blacksmith Badia,—all of whose descendants are now living, and engaged in the occupation of their fathers in the villages of the Ganthwárá fraternity.

Hárá, हाड़ा हाडा

A branch of the Chauhan Rajputs. There are a few of this distinguished tribe in Rattanpúr Bansí of Gorakhpúr, but they are very rarely met with elsewhere in the North-Western Provinces. The chief of the Hárás is the Raja of Kotah Búndí or Harautí.

Helá, हिला हिला

See Bhangi.

Hele, هيلي हेल्ले

Is the name given to the tribe of Játs which was in occupation of the country previous to the arrival of the Dhe.—See Ját.

Herí, هميري हेरी

A tribe of Musulman Rajputs chiefly found in Jaspúr, a Parganah of Moradabad. They were introduced for the same purpose as the Barwaík, q.v.

Húriyá, هوريا हरिया

A small clan of Sombansí Rajputs in Athgánwan and Mariyáhu, in the Province of Benares.

Halálkhor, حلال خور हलालखोर

See Bhangí.

Halwái, حلوائی हलवाई

A Confectioner. In the Lower Doáb it has become an appellation of a caste or tribe. In most other places it is applied to the trader only. The caste is sub-divided into Chailha, Bakarra, Dúbe, Kanaujia, Tilbhúnja, etc., etc.

Hardehá, هردیہا हरदेहा

Is the name of one of the tribes of Káchhí.—See Káchhí.

Hardwás, هردواس हर्दवास

There are a few of this clan of Rajputs in Deogánw of Azimgarh, and Salempúr Majhaur of Gorakhpúr.

Harihobans, هرهبانس हरिहोबंस

A clan of this name exists in Ballia, a Parganah of Ghazipur.—See Hayobans.

Haratkul, هرتكل हरतकुल

One of the sub-divisions of Gaur Brahmans, q.v.

Hayobans, هیوبنس हयोवंस

See Benaudha and Harihobans. The Raja of Haldí in Ghazipur is of this conspicuous clan, which once held large dominions on the banks of the Narbadda ("Journal A. S. Bengal," August, 1837*); and has the credit of having been instrumental in expelling the Cherus from the southern bank of the Ganges. The Hayobans are Sombansí; and Mahesvati, or Maheswar, on the Narbadda, the first capital of the Lunar race, was founded by Sahasra Arjuna of the Hihya (Hayobans) race. A small remnant of them yet exists in Sohagpúr, and they are recorded as Zamíndárs of several villages in Ballia of Ghazipur.

Jádo, جادو जादो

One of the low castes in a village,—the same as Kamín. In some places the term is equivalent to Súdra.

Jádon, جادون जादेन

Classically, Yadu, or Yádava, a tribe of Rajputs of the Chandarbans division, who profess to trace their origin in a direct line from Krishna.

Yadu is the patronymic of all the descendants of Buddha, the ancestor of the Lunar race, of which the most conspicuous are now the Bhattí and the Jareja; but the title of Jádon is now exclusively applied to the tribe which appears never to have strayed far from the limits of the ancient Suraseni, and we consequently find them still in considerable numbers in that neighbourhood. The large tract south of the Chambal, called after them Yaduvati, is in the possession of the Gwalior Mah-rattas, and the state of Kiraulí on the Chambal is now their chief independent possession.

* The reference is to J.A.S.B., Vol. VI., Part II., p. 623, where there is a long and interesting article on the Garha Mundala Rajas by Sleeman.—B.

Some of the tribe, or at least professedly of the tribe, are Zamíndárs in our provinces,—as the proprietors of the Talukas of Awa Mísa in Mathura, Somna in Aligarh, and Kotila in Agra. There are many of them also in Fattihabad and Shamsabad of Agra; Mustafabad and Gihror in Mainpúrí; Sahar and Aríng in Mathura; Sohna in Gúrgaon; and in Koel, Hasangarh, Goreyí, Marehra, Jalálí, Akbarabad, Sekandra Rao, and Khair in Aligarh. They are considered spirited farmers. All these have adopted the practice of second marriages, and are now considered of an inferior rank to their brethren in Kiraulí, and in Jewar of Bulandshahr, which was the first spot they occupied on their emigration to the Doáb. The Jádons of Jewar are distinguished by the title of Chaukarzáda; but, by way of reproach, the inferior Jádons are called Bágrí by their neighbours. They are regarded as of servile descent; and they are certainly not admitted generally to intermarriages with the higher Rajputs of the neighbourhood. It is very probable that their increasing wealth and importance will soon soften these prejudices; indeed, some marriages lately made by the family of Awa Mísa have raised its respectability to a high standard, insomuch that the Talukdár now lays claim to a direct descent from Anand Pál, the son of the Kiraulí Raja, Kumár Pál, and asserts that the Baresirí, Jaiswar, and other self-styled Jádons are altogether of an inferior stock.

Jádons are also found in Hoshangabad, whither they emigrated after Akbar's conquests on the Narbadda.

Jáis,

جایس जाईस

A tribe of Surjbansí Rajputs resident in the parganahs of Nohjhíl, and Máat in Mathura, in which they were originally much larger proprietors than they are at present.

The Jáis themselves assert that they had thirty-six villages, and not twenty-four, as is mentioned in the article Chaubísa, in compliance with the prevalent opinion. They trace their origin from Ajudhya, like true Súrjbansí Rajputs. Their rank may be judged by their receiving in marriage the daughters of Kachh-wáha, Jaiswar, and Bachhul Rajputs.

Jágláin, جاگلاين जागलाईन

A clan of Játs, proprietors of a few villages in Panípat Bangar.

Jákhar, जाकहर जाखर

A subdivision of the Ját tribe, q.v.

Ját, जाट जाट

This is the Jaut and Jhut of the printed Glossary. There are several clans of this interesting tribe in the North-West Provinces, particularly in Dehli and the Upper Doáb. They are rarer in Rohilkhand, and in the Doáb do not extend below Mainpúrí.

The chief clans of the Dehli Territory are Sangwán, Sheoram, Bágrí, Dahia, Ganthwára, and Dalál. The Sangwán extend West from Dádri till they meet the Sheoram. To the West and North-West of them extend the Bágrí. From Bowána to beyond Kharkhauda, are the Dahia, whence that tract is called Dahian. The Ganthwaras surround Gohána, and from Mandhautí to Dadrí are the Dalál. There are many others of less importance, as the Katíra, Loháin, Rongí, Antal, Sayil, Bora, Jatární, Jákhar, Ahláwat, Kadíain, Sakel, Sa-traungí, etc., etc.; and on the borders of Hariána we meet with the large tribes of Púnya, Bhangíwal, Godára, Kasua, etc., etc. In the Doáb we have the Salaklaín, Balaín, Ganthwára, Ráthí, Ghanghas or Gangas, Múndian, Gand, Lákri, Nohwal, Thu-karel, Thenwan, Khúthel, etc., etc. In Rohilkhand there are the Cháhal, Dhanok, Dhalíwal, Berhwal, Untwal, Bangi, Alúma, Khobra, Dhanoí, Láthar, Dighelya, Machhar, Sangwán, Jatrání, Chhílur, Sekráwat, Harrí, Sheko, Gillu, Dhariwal, Siddhú, Gandhú, and sundry more equally euphonious.

The Játs of the North-Western Provinces are separated into two grand divisions—the Dhe and the Hele of the Doáb, or Pachhade and Deswale of Rohilkhand and Dehli. The former (the Dhe and Pachhade*) are a later swarm from that teeming hive of nations which has been winging its way from the North-West from time immemorial. They are in consequence frequently called Panjábís, and scarcely date their residence beyond a century before the present time, when the troubles of the empire enabled them quietly to extend their usurpations. The Dhes frequently have no Jaga, or family genealogist, as the Heles have, and are accused by the latter of adopting some Muhammedan practices in their marriages, particularly in discarding the Mor, or nuptial coronet, and adopting the Sehra, or veil. They have hitherto, in short, been entirely separate, and never intermarried till very lately, when the Balamgarh Raja consented to an union with the Kaithal family, from which time the connexion has increased, and all differences of habits or origin will perhaps before long be obliterated.

The Játs, who were always considered as one of the thirty-six royal races, are now never admitted to intermarriages with the Rajputs. Colonel Tod † assigns as the reason of this, that their

* The term may be derived either from Pachchhim, “the west,” or from Píchhe, “afterwards.” The Pachhadas are contemptuously spoken of by their elder brethren, and a common proverb couples them with a black snake and worn-out cattle :

बूढी भैंस पुराणा गाडा

काला सांप और सगा पछादा

कुछ लाभ हुआ तो हुआ न खादइ खादा

† On the subject of their descent he is contradictory. He asserts in one part that immigration was so long subsequent to that of the Solar and Lunar Races, that their alliance has been rejected. But, notwithstanding this repugnance to a complete amalgamation, it is evident that connexions have frequently been formed between Játs and Rajputs, though they may not be dignified with the name of marriages.

We find them, as in the case of the Gújars, frequently attributing their origin to a Rajput. Many of their tribes indeed bear Rajput names, such as Dahima, Kachhwaha, Powar, Johya, Bágri, Dahia, etc. The Balaíns, Nohwal, and Thukarel say they are descended from Chauhán, the Sarawats and Salaklaíns from Tuar Rajputs, and so forth.*

It is strange that almost all the Játs, as well as the Gújars so descended, concur in the same ridiculous story respecting their connexion with the Rajputs—namely, that a female Ját or Gújar was going along with water pots on her head, and that they are not of pure blood, yet includes them in his own corrected list of the Chattís Kala. From an inscription at p. 796 of the first volume of the “Annals of Rajasthau,” it is evident that, in the fifth century, the Játs intermarried with the Rajputs.

* This is to be observed also of the Rye, or Re, and other tribes of similar descent, who have húkka paní in common with Játs and Gújars. Among them we have Bir-gújar, Kachhwaha, Tuar, Chauhán, Johiyá, Katherya, etc. etc.

Sir J. Malcolm, in his “Essay on the Bhills” (Trans. R.A.S., Vol. I., p. 80), says: “The answer from a chief, skilled in the legends, was the following short fable: In former times, when Parasu Ráma (Avatára) declared a war of extirpation upon the Rajputs (in revenge for an offence against his father), numbers of that tribe were obliged to save themselves by denying that they belonged to it, professing to be members of other classes of the community. To punish this evasion, Parasu Ráma insisted that every individual should eat the food of the tribe to which he declared himself to belong. Those Rajputs who did so lost their caste, and were obliged to adhere to the tribes of their adoption, but retained their former name, . . . and this (said the old man) accounts for your finding men who call themselves Rhatores, Solankis, etc., amongst the Bhills, and many other low castes, with whom their ancestors, when in dread of extirpation, associated. Some of these degraded Rajputs are found among the Telis, or oilmen, and the Baláyas, or guides; and even, I am informed, among the Chamárs, or shoemakers, who are deemed the vilest and most unclean of the Hindu community.”

she stopped a runaway buffalo by pressing her foot on the rope tied to its neck, and did so without spilling the water. This feat of strength and agility so pleased some Rajput chieftain who was looking on, that he took her to his home, and thus a new family, or Got, sprang from the connexion. Others are fond of arrogating to themselves a still superior lineage, asserting their procreation from the matted hair (Jatá) of Mahadeo; and some will have it that their name is corrupted from the illustrious Yádivas, or Jádós, to which latter opinion Tod and Wilson (Select. from Mahabh. p. 46) both seem to incline.

Almost all the Játés of our Provinces, who do not acknowledge any descent from Rajputs, trace their origin from the far North-West, and some of them, as the Ganthwárás, say that they have heard from their ancestors that Gajni or Garh-Gajni, was their original seat, by which names the town was known to the Hindus, before it became famous under the Muhammedans, as Ghazní or Ghaznín.* Here, without any knowledge of the learned discussions about the identity of the Játés and the ancient Getæ, we find the traditionary legends of these ignorant tribes pointing to the remote Ghazní as their original seat, the very spot we know to have been occupied by the Yuechi, or, as Klaproth (Tabl. Hist. de l'Asie, p. 288) says, more correctly, Yu-ti,† in the first centuries of our era, after the Sakas

* There are also other Gajnis known to the Hindus; one was the ancient name of Cambay (the port of Balabhipúra); the ruins of it are still to be seen about three miles from the modern city. There is another on the estuary of the Maihi. These, however, are quite out of the line of the Ját migration.

† Professor Lassen says that the substitution of Yuti for Yuechi, or Yuetschi, is quite unauthorized, and accuses Klaproth of monomania in his endeavours to trace the identity of the Getæ, Goths, and Játés. Dr. Prichard, who is much of the same opinion, adds, "the supposition that the Játés, or Juts, upon the Indus are the descendants of the Yuetschi does not appear altogether so preposterous; but is supported by no proof, except the very trifling one of a slight resemblance of names."—"Researches into the Physical History of Mankind," Vol. IV., p. 132.—E.

It is much to be regretted that this opinion of one of the highest and soundest were repelled back from the frontiers of India, and left the country between India and Persia open for their occupation. The Ját tribes no doubt emigrated, not all at once, but at different times, and it is probable that those in the North-West are among the latest importations. Elphinstone, in his "History of India" (Vol. I. p. 445), draws a distinction between the Jāts of the Indus and the Jāts of Bhartpúr (Sinsinwar); to which it may be sufficient to answer that in the Parganahs where Jāts are now, they are recorded as Jāts in the Ayín-i-Akbarí. So that the difference of the long and short a is a mere fashion of spelling,* and shows no difference of origin, family, or habit. The priority of occupation is perhaps to be conceded to the Jāts of Scinde and Rajputana.

The last arrival is the Dhe, and as this tribe had been hitherto excluded from complete union with the older Jāts, they may probably be descendants of the Dahæ, whom we know (Strabo, xi.) to have been on the shores of the Caspian, the conterminous neighbours of the Massagetæ (the great,† or as Larcher supposes, the Eastern Jāts) in the South-West, and on terms of amity with them during the latter period of their residence in that quarter, and may therefore have advanced with them on their onward progress towards India, after the destruction of the Bactrian empire. This would sufficiently account for their not authorities should not have had the effect of restraining those speculations about Indo-Scythians, and the like, which some English writers so largely indulge in; mere verbal resemblance is, especially in Indian philology, the most unsafe of all arguments.—B.

* In the N.W.P. they are called Jāts; in the Panjāb, Jāts. This is a mere dialectic difference. Panjābī always shortens the long a of Hindi: witness काम, प. कम्म, etc. General Cunningham tells me that in Rajputana, where there are found both Hindu and Musulman Jāts, the latter are known as Jāts, in distinction to the former; but this remark does not hold good for the Panjāb.—B.

† Massa means "great" in Pehlevi. Vans Kennedy ("Ancient and Hindu Mythology," p. 94) is not disposed to agree with Dr. Jamieson and others, that the Getæ and Massagetæ were originally the same people.

being entirely incorporated with the great Játs. At all events it must be confessed that the resemblance between Dhe and Dahæ or Daæ, gives some colour to the hypothesis. Dahas are also mentioned among the Western tribes in the Pauranic Geography.—(See Vishnu Purana, ed. Wilson, p. 192).

Few of the North-Western Játs have been converted, like those of Sindh, to Muhammedanism, and yet they can scarcely be called pure Hindus, for they have many observances, both domestic and religious, not consonant with Hindu precepts. Second marriages are common, and they are still accused by their neighbours of having a community of wives.*—(Clio. 216.) There is a disposition also to reject the fables of the Puranic Mythology, and to acknowledge the unity of the Godhead. Hence probably one of the chief causes of their becoming such ready and devoted disciples of Nanak Shah (i.e. Sikhs).

* * Much ingenuity has been wasted in guesses as to the origin of the Játs or Jats. The hypothesis which is gaining ground among sound philologists, and which, moreover, rests on universal native tradition, makes them either Rajputs who have lost caste, or the offspring of Rajputs and some lower caste. In some parts of the Panjáb, where they are exceedingly numerous, they say they lost caste by crossing the Indus.† They all say they came originally from the N. W. P., though they have some traditionary reminiscences of a sojourn in Persia. I have been obliged to let some of the author's remarks about Getæ, etc., stand, as they are mixed up with valuable matter, but it should be understood that the line of inquiry he adopts is purely tentative, and cannot now be supported.

The Játs of the Panjáb amount to nearly one-half of the entire population of that province, and are found in every part of it; west of the Ráví they are nearly all Musulmáns. Two of their most numerous and important septs are the Vahráich and Gondal; the latter, who are numerous about Soháva of Gujrát and in Shahpúr, are massively built, stalwart, and bold, with large beards, which they generally dye blue with indigo. They were not long ago notorious cattle-thieves, nearly as bad as their neighbours the Gújars. The practice of chádar dúlná, or marriage of a widow with the younger brother of her deceased husband (v. "Karáo," Pt. II.) is prevalent among them, and arises, I fancy, from the fact that women are rather scarce, and have to be bought by the father of the bridegroom, who naturally desires to economise; and if his eldest son dies, utilises the piece of female property he has bought (mál is the common term in use) by handing her over to the next son, who marries her by the simple process of throwing his scarf (chádar) over her head, whence the name. The Jäts of Gujrát call the low fertile tract of country along the Chenab, where they dwell, Herát, from some traditionary reminiscence of their having once dwelt at Herát; but this can scarcely have been before the arrival of the Aryan race in India. Those who wish to see how much can be made of the Indo-Scythian theory are referred to Gen. Cunningham's Report, Pt. iv., p. 19, where they will not fail to notice that whereas in India at the present day the Dhe is a subdivision of the Ját, in the time of Strabo the Xanthii are a subdivision of the Dahæ, so that if we are to identify Xanthii with Jäts, and Dahæ with Dhe, an interchange of names, or inversion of some sort must have taken place.

* But the accusation is quite unfounded.—B.

† See the remarks about Attok, s.v. Gaur Tagá. The Játs crossed the river when the Rajputs refused to do so.—B.

It would seem that at that undefined date, and in those undetermined regions alluded to by the above-named writer, the various tribes and races enjoyed a multiplicity of names which must have been tant soit peu bewildering to themselves and their neighbours; for we are taught that the Jäts were once called Abars, which is connected with Abiria in India, generally supposed to be the land of the Abhiri or Ahírs. They also had the name of Sus, and many others. All this may be true, but the application of it to the Jāts rests on the single link afforded by the similarity of Xanthii to Jāts. On the other hand we have the whole of Sindh peopled with Jāts. Dr. Trumpp says* “The original race in Sindh are the Jāts (जतु or जटु) cultivators of the soil, and camel-drivers. It is no argument against this that they are Mahomedans, and looked down on by Hindus. There is no doubt that these Jāts, who appear to be the original race in the country, belong to the real Aryan Stock, which stretches from the mouths of the Indus as far as the valley of Peshawar, and through the whole length of the Indus has retained its own speech, though with some modifications. I have long ago convinced myself, from my journeys from Karachi to Peshawar that the Jāt-folk is not more separated from the rest of the community than can be accounted for by various circumstances.” The argument derived from language is strongly in favour of the pure Aryan origin of the Jāts. If they were Scythian conquerors, where has their Scythian language gone to, and how comes it that they now speak and have for centuries spoken an Aryan language, a dialect of Hindi? In Peshawar, the Derajat, and across the Sulaymaní range in Kach Gondava this language is known by the name of Hindki, or Jāt’s speech (जत की गाली). The theory of the Aryan origin of the Jāts, if it is to be overthrown at all, must have stronger arguments directed against it than any that have yet been adduced. Physical type and language are considerations which are not to be set aside by mere verbal resemblance, especially when the words on which reliance is placed come to us mangled beyond recognition by Greeks or Chinese.—B.

Játli,

جاٹلی जाटली

See Gújar, of which tribe they are a sub-division.

* Zeitsch. d. Deutsch. Morg. Gesellsch., xv., p. 690, “Das Sindhi in Vergleich zum Prakrit, u.s.w.—B.

Játú,

جاٹو जाटू

The name of a Rajput tribe in the neighbourhood of Karnál, and in Hariana, in which tract of country they are considered at one time to have held 1440 villages. They are one of the four divisions of the Tuars,—viz., Jatú, Jaraita, Raghú, Satraura. The Játús are now chiefly Musulman, or Rangar, but there are a few Hindus in Hissar, and in Bidaulí in Muzaffarnagar.

Játuá,

جاٹوا जाटुआ

A branch of the Chamár tribe, q.v.

The word is also frequently pronounced Jatua.

Jewár,

جیوار जेवार

A clan of Rajputs of this name is found in Saugor and Bundelkhand. As they receive in marriage the daughters of Saraswár and Rathore Rajpats, they may be considered to hold a respectable rank.

Jhinjar,

جینجر झिंजर

See Gújar, of which tribe they form a sub-division.

Jhojhá,

جھو جھا झोझा

The word literally means the stomach, and is the designation of an inferior class of Musulmans. The Jhojhás, in Parganah Baran of Bulandshahr, represent themselves as converted Rathores, Chauháns, and Tuars; but by others they are considered to be converted slaves of these tribes. In like manner, those of Anúpsahr are said to be slaves of Moghals, converted to Mahomedanism. They are despised by the Badgújars and other converted Rajputs of the neighbourhood, with whom they are not suffered to intermarry; from which their servile origin may be fairly presumed. They are scattered over different parts of the Doáb and Rohilkhand, and are reported to be good cultivators. Hence the saying :—

झोझा हाली लाकर घर बैठो चौपड खेल

“employ a Jhojhá as a ploughman, and you may sit at home and play at backgammon.”

One of the chief causes of the value attached to their services is, that being Musulmans, they are not restrained by Hindu observances of certain festivals. Thus, while Hindus are waiting for the Dithwan (q.v.) before they cut their sugar-cane, the Jhojhás have already begun to press their cane and manufacture their sugar.

Jhonaíyá, جهونیا झोनैया

One of the classes into which the Kurmís are divided.—See Kurmí.

Jhatiyáná, جهتیانا झटियाना

The Jhatiyáná, or Jhutiyáná, is a small clan of Rajputs found in Parganahs Sirdhana, Baghpat, Soron, Shikarpúr, Budhana, and Khúrja in the Upper Doáb.

Jijhotiyá, جيجھوٹیا जिझोटिया

This is a branch of the Kanaujia Brahmans (q.v.), which ranks low in public estimation. Their more correct name is Yajurhota, derived originally, it is said, from their having made burnt-offerings according to the form of the Yajurveda. Their sub-divisions are much of the same character as those of the Kanaujias, but it is needless to enumerate them. Amongst their chief families are reckoned the Chaubes of Rúpraund, the Dubes of Dauria, and the Misrs of Hamírpúr and Karíá.

Jinhar, جنهر जिनहर

Is the name of one of the numerous Gots of Gújars, q.v.

Johiyá, جوهيا जोहिया

Johiyás are by some authorities included among the thirty-six royal races of India ; by others they are considered a mere ramification of the Yadu Bhattí. In the gathering of the Rajpúts to defend the Mori prince of Chittor, they are styled Lords of Jangaldes, which included Hariána, Bhatner, and Nagor. There are, I believe, no Rajputs of this clan, except a very few in Khairagarh of Allahabad, and those in the Doáb, who form a Chaurási in the neighbourhood of Allahabad and Chail, and who are all converted to Mahomedanism. Colonel Tod considers the Johiyás to be entirely extinct. The Johiyás, who held 1,100 villages in Jangaldes were completely subdued, and perhaps in part expelled from their ancient abodes, by the Godaras, with the aid of Bíka, the Rathore, the founder of Bikanír. This occurred at the close of the fifteenth century, but the occupation of the Lower Doáb was perhaps of an earlier date. That there was not a complete expulsion at the period above-mentioned we know, from Johiyás being recorded as late as the time of Akbar, as still holding Zamíndáris in Sirsa. The Johiyá are considered the same as the Jinjúta of Bábar, but the position thus assigned appears too far to the westward.

Jugád gaur, جگاد گوڑ जुगाद गौड

See Gaur Brahman.—The name would be more correctly Jugádi.

Jútiyál, جوٹيال जूटियाल

See Barwáik. The word is also pronounced Jutiya.

Joshí, جوشي जोषी

An inferior tribe of Brahmans employed in casting nativities and fostering other superstitious practices of the natives. Their name is corrupted from ज्योतिषी, an astrologer, and they are known also by the names of Bhadaria and Dakaut. A very different meaning, however, is conveyed by calling a Brahman a Bará Jotishí, which is a title of great consideration, and implies that he is learned in the Jyotish Shastras, without engaging in the actual occupations of Jōshís. It is with reference to this original meaning that the Jōshís of Kamaon maintain a high character for respectability.*

Jagá, جگا जगा

The word is more properly Jágá जागा; but the common pronunciation is Jagá.—See Bhat.

Jaganbansí, جگنبسی जगनबंसी

A tribe of Brahmans who hold Zamíndarí possessions in Parganah Kora, Zillah Fattihpúr.—See Gautam.

Jandauliyá, جندولیا जंदौलिया

A small clan of Rajputs in Chíbúmau, Zillah Banda.

Janghára, जंगारा जंघारा

A large and somewhat turbulent tribe of Rajputs of the Tuar clan, in the south-east of Rohilkhand, whence they appear to have expelled the Katheryas. They are large proprietors in Usahat, Farídpúr, Mehrahbad, Bísulpúr, Salempúr, Tilhur, Jalalpúr, and Khera Bajhera, and are found as asamís in Khotar, and Bísulpúr. They are sub-divided into the Bhúr and Taraín Janghárás, and these again have their sub-divisions, which it is needless here to detail; but it may be mentioned that the Bhúr rank first, on account of the Turaín clan having adopted the practice of Karao, q.v. They profess to have come to these parts under a leader called Dhappú Dhám, whose name is immortalized in popular poetry for his gallant opposition to some chief of Badaon.

* This distinction of meaning is not preserved in the Eastern districts.—B.

नीचे धरती ऊपर राम
बीच में लड़े ढप्पू धाम

“Below is earth, above is Rám,
Between the two fights Dhappú Dhám.”

The Janghárás were once a powerful clan in the neighbourhood of Koel, where, though they are now but small proprietors, they once held four separate Chaurásís—that of Mandrak, held by the descendants of Ladhar; of Chandpúrí, held by the descendants of Chand; of Barain, held by the descendants of Megh Raja; of Aglás, held by the descendants of Ajay Raj. One of his descendants, Madhukar, is also famous in local ballads.

मधुकर मधुकर हूँ कहूँ हूँ आयो मधुकर पास
जो मधुकर घर नहीं हैं तो कौन काम अगलास
जहां मधुकर तहां केतकी तहां भवर करै गुंजार
एक मधुकर को कमल देहि खडग दान संभार
पांसै छप्पन दीजिये पीठ न एकौ लगिया
पांसै छप्पन मांगिया धकरा गांव से भगिया

“Madhukar, Madhukar I call, I have come to Madhukar;
If Madhukar be not at home, what good is Aglás?
Where Madhukar is there is the ketaki: there the bee hums.*
Give (but) a blanket to Madhukar, and (you will) receive a sword as a gift.
‘Give 556;’ not a back was touched;
He asked 556; the Dhakará fled from his village.”

These lines are often quoted in allusion to his splendid donation of 556 horses to his Bhat, for which the Dhakara of

* A sort of pun on the name of Madhukar, which means “a bee.” The ketaki is a fragrant tree (Pandanus odoratissima, Roxb.) much affected by bees.—B.

Goreyí, as he was unable to present the saddles, was compelled for shame to leave his ancestral home, and take up his abode in Kherí Barhan of Jalesar. The whole story exemplifies the power of the bards, as well as the generosity of Madhukar, whose lineal descendant is still Raí of Aglás, and chief of the clan.

These Janghárás intermarry with Púndírs, give their daughters to Chauháns and Badgújars, and receive daughters from Bhals, Jáis, and Gahlots.

Janútúrwá, جنوتوروا जनतूवा

A small clan of Rajputs in Gangapúr, Zillah Benares.

Janwár, जनवार जनवार

There are a few of this tribe of Rajputs in Sihonda and Simauní of Bundelkhand; Rasúlabad and Bithúr of Cawnpore; and Kútiya Gunír of Fattibpúr.

Janwariyá, जनوريا जंवरिया

A tribe of Ahírs.—See Ahír.

Jaráitá, जरािता जराइता

One of the divisions of the Tomar, or Tuar, clan.—See Jatú and Tomar.

Jariyá, जरिया जरिया

One of the seven divisions of the Lodh tribe, a widely spread caste, chiefly fishermen, whose numbers amounted to 585,932 in the census of 1865 throughout the provinces.—B.

Jarethá, जरिथा जरिथा

The name of one of the clans of Kachhís.—See Kachhí.

Jasáwar, جساور जसावर

Jasáwar, or Jasáwat, is the name of a tribe of Rajputs in Aríng of Mathura. They are held in no great consideration.

Jatrání, جترانی जतरानी

A tribe of Játs in Rohilkhand and Dehli.—See Ját.

Jawanpúriyá, جونیپوریا जवनपुरिया

A sub-division of the Kachhí tribe, q.v., which takes its name from the town of Jaunpúr.

Jaiswár, جیسوار जैसवार

See Jasawur and Juswar in the printed Glossary.

A tribe of inferior Jadonbansí Rajputs in the Parganahs of Alípúr Pattí, Kishní Nabíganj, and Azimnagar in Central Doáb. Jaiswár, or rather Jaeswára, is also the name of a sub-division of Chamárs, Dhanuks, Kalals, Moraos, Kurmis, Telís, Baniás, and many other inferior tribes; and implies perhaps that they came originally from Jaís, a large manufacturing town in Oudh. It must have been a place of much greater importance than it is at present, to have given name, like Sankasya, Sringavera, Kanauj, and Sravasti,* to so many distinct families. Kasba Jaís is also mentioned with distinction by the early Mahomedan authors, particularly in the Lataif'-Ashrafi, or record of the acts and opinions of Ashraf Jahangír. On one occasion when this sainted personage visited Jaís, it is stated (in the fifty-seventh Latífa) that nearly three thousand pupils came out to pay their respects. In the Imperial Register also it is mentioned as the chief town of a large Parganah.

* In the article Chaurasí the position of Sankasya has been indicated. Sringavera is mentioned in the “Rámáyana” as a village which was in the midst of a forest extending on both sides of the Ganges, inhabited by Nishadas, or wild tribes, who assisted in ferrying Rama, Lakshman, and Sita over the river. Sringavera is the modern Singraur, of which the consequence has declined only lately, for it is mentioned as the chief town of a Parganah in the “Ayín-i-Akbarí,” and by the Jesuit Tieffenthaler in the middle of last century. It lies on the left bank of the Ganges, about twenty-five miles above Allahabad, and is now included in the Parganah of Nawabganj (V., p. 274). The Singrauria Kachhís and Kurmís derive their name from this town.

Káchhí,

کاجھی کاکی

A tribe of industrious cultivators extending throughout the greater part of Hindústán. They are much employed in market and flower gardens. Those of the North-Western Provinces assert that they have, like the Kurmís and Chamárs, seven sub-divisions, which are generally enumerated as the Kanaújia, Hardíha, Singrauria, Jawanpúria, Bamhania or Magahya, Jaretha, and Kachhwaha. These tribes do not eat together or intermarry. The Kanaújia are considered to rank the highest of the seven; the Kachhwaha the lowest. By the Kachhwahas themselves this relative rank is reversed.

The Kanaújia extend from about Kanaúj to Benares. The Hardíha are chiefly in Eastern Oudh and Baiswara, the Singrauria in the South-West corner of Oudh, the Jawanpúria in Benaudha, the Bamhania and Jaretha in Behar, and the Kachhwaha are chiefly found to the Westward, as in Birj and Jaypúr.

There are, however, other Káchís besides these, such as the Dhakolia, Sukhsena, and Sachan; in short, like the Kurmís, Káchis seldom coincide in the names of their seven sub-

The Kanaújia families have been frequently mentioned throughout this work, and of course derive their name and origin from Kanaúj.

From Sravasti we appear to have the Sribastam Káyaths and Naís, and the Sirí Batham Dhubís; if so, they would lead us, like the Suksena Káyaths with respect to Sankasya, to an identification of the old town of Sravasti, for they trace their origin to a place which still bears nearly the same name, about eight miles to the West of Faizabad, near the ancient Ajodhya.

divisions; and it is evident that that definite number does not exist.—See Kachhwāra, Koerí, Morao.

Kanaujiyá, كنوجيا कनौजिया

This is the name of a sub-division of several tribes in the North-West, who trace their origin from the ancient city of Kanauj (see Kurmí and Káchí); but, taken by itself, it is more especially applied to a large and influential clan of the Brahmanical order.*

Of Brahmans there are ten well-known sub-divisions, of which five are Gaur, and five Dravira. Of the five Gaur, Kanaujia is one, and may also be considered the most numerous; as it extends from the Siwalik Hills to the Narbadda, and the Bay of Bengal. The sub-divisions of the Kanaujias are five. Kanaujia proper, Sarwaria, Sanadh or Sanaudha, Jijhotia, and Bhúinhár. These Kanaujias again, according to the statement in the “Tambíhu’l-Jáhilín,” are sub-divided into sixteen denominations, of which most, as in the other Brahman classes, are derived from the occupations and abilities which each was supposed to possess. The sixteen names are here repeated from the same work:—Garg, Gautam, Sandel, Pande, Díchhat, Patakh, Súkul, Dube, Tewarí, Chaube, Awasthí, Tirbedí, Bhat-tacharj, Upadhya, Bajpaí, and Misr, of which the first three are said to be far superior to the rest. There seems reason to believe that the author is quite wrong in this classification, and that his error partly arises from his confusing the accounts of the Sarwarias and Kanaujias. The first three are the chief amongst the Sarwarias, but amongst the Kanaujias are either of no importance, or not extant.

* It should be observed that whenever the lower castes begin to talk about their sub-divisions, they always give them the grandest possible names, such as Chauhán, Kanaujia, and so on. This shews how little reliance can be placed on their accounts.—B.

Amongst the Kanaujias the chief families are called the Khatkul, or six houses. There are, however, really six and a-half chief houses, and their names and Gots (Gotra) are as follows :—

1	2	3
Sandel Got.	Upaman Got.	Bharadwaj Got.
Parsú ka Misr, etc.	Lakhnau ka Bajpaí, Garhwas ka Dube, Parbhakar ka Awasthí, etc.	Bala ka Sukul, etc.
4	5	6
Bhuradwaj Got.*	Katiáyan or Viswamitra Got.	Kasyap Got.
Khor ka Pande, Gargásan ka Pande, etc.	Manjgáñw ka Misr, Súthian ka Misr, etc.	Jahangírabad ka Tewarí, etc.
	6½ Sakrint Got.
	Nabhele ka Sukul, Fattíhabadí, etc.

* Professor Wilson, in a note to the “Uttara Rama Charitra,” observes that the accounts of Bharadwaja are rather obscure. “In some places he is called the son of Vrihaspati, and in the ‘Harivans’ is said to have been adopted by Bharata, as King of Pratisthana. In the ‘Rámáyana,’ Bharadwaja appears as a sage residing at Prayága or Allahabad, where a temple dedicated to him still exists on the high bank of the Ganges. In the ‘Mahábhárat’ he is described as residing at Haridwar, and the father of Drona, the military preceptor of the Pandava and Kaurava princes. He is also the parent of Arundhati, the wife of Vasishtha.” May not this obscurity be cleared up by supposing, as the above genealogy purports, that there are two saints of nearly the same name, Bháradwaja and Bharadwaja? The Kanaujias certainly acknowledge the distinction, and this kind of evidence being founded on immemorial tradition and usage in respect to intermarriages, is not to be slighted.

In Sanskrit the long a indicates descent: as Ságara from Sagara; Bhágirathí from Bhagiratha. In the same way Drona, the son of Bharadwaj, is called Bháradwaj in the “Mahábhárat” (see p. 3 of “Johnson’s Selections,” “Wilkins’ Sanskrit Grammar,” p. 494, and Langlois’ “Harivansa,” pp. 70, 71, 145). But this cannot be the relationship existing between these two persons; because, if they had been father and son, the son could not have established a separate Got, being already of the Got of his father—himself the child of two fathers (see “Vishnu Purana,” p. 449). The “Prabar Manjari” appears to explain the difficulty. Bharadwaj, the father, established no Got, but his son Bháradwaj did—and the Bharadwaj, whose Got we now

The divisions below these are almost endless, and few Kanaujias can ever be got to enumerate them. It may be sufficient to remark that these six and a-half houses, or the Khatkul, are of much greater consequence than the rest, and receive from them daughters in marriage; but do not allow their own daughters to marry, except in one of the Khatkul tribes. The honor of an alliance with these privileged classes is so great, that like the Kulins of Bengal, some of them have as many as twenty or twenty-five wives.

The equally intricate divisions of the Sarwaras will be noticed in their proper place, but it may be as well to mention here that amongst them are included the Sawalákhí, who are said to have been made Brahmans by Raja Ram Baghel, when he was in a hurry to make a sacrifice, but as he could not perform it without assembling a lakh and a quarter of Brahmans, he collected people from all classes and parts, and invested them with the janeu, or sacred thread. Others say that Manik Chand, the brother of the famous Jay Chand Rathore, others, that one of the Surneyt Rajas, others that the redoubtable Ram Chandar himself was the manufacturer.* However this may be, they rank very low in the scale of Brahmans.

have was the son of Angiras (see also the "Nirnai Sindh," Chap. III., in which the "Prabar Manjarí" is quoted).

Again, in Vol. II., p. 12, of the "Hindu Theatre," Professor Wilson says, "It is asserted that thirteen Gotras or families of Brahmans owe their origin to as many divine sages called after their names. Kasyapa (Kasip) is one of their number. The Aswalayana Sutra of the "Rig Veda" contains the enumeration of the Gotras, and their sub-divisions, but in a very involved and unintelligible style. The popular enumeration of them, however, is not uncommon; but it is nearly, if not wholly, confined to the South of India, where several of the reputed representatives of these tribes yet exist."

He again says, at p. 3 of his Notes to "Johnson's Extracts from the Mahá-bhárata," that in the South of India Brahmans are still found pretending to be sprung from some of the patriarchal families. Do not these statements require qualification with reference to the Gotras of the Kanaujias given above?

* A precisely similar story is told of the Bhúinhárs, q.v.—B.

MAP of the NORTH WESTERN PROVINCES

INDIA Showing the Occupation of the BRAHMANICAL TRIBES.

To face Vol. I. p. 149

EXPLANATION

- Surmaea
- Khybera
- Kanayea
- Sanadh
- Gaur

The Kanaujias are found chiefly in the Central Doáb, where many, particularly in Etawa, are possessed of Zamíndáris. They extend also into Kúneh and the Western portion of British Bundelkhand, and into Baiswara in the Oudh territory.

The Sanaudhas, or Sanadhs, as they are more familiarly called, touch the Kanaujias on the North-West, extending over Central Rohilkhand, and part of the Upper and Central Doáb, from Pilibhít to Gwalior.

The boundary line (which has been delineated on a small map) runs from the North-West angle of Rampúr, through Richa, Jahanabad, Nawabganj, Bareilly, Farrídpúr, to the Ramganga; thence through Salempúr and the borders of Míhrabad; thence down the Ganges to the borders of Kanauj; thence up the Kalínaddí to the Western border of Alipúr Pattí, through Bhoígaon, Soj, Etawa, Bíbamaú, and down the Jumna to the junction of the Chambal. Instances of course occur of occupation by either party on the other line, but they are very rare.

On the North-West, the Sanadh are met by the Gaur Brahmans, whose boundary line is also sufficiently definite to admit of description. It runs through the Rampúr territory as far as the Ramganga, thence through Seraulí, Seondara, Neraulí, Bahjoí, Rajpúra, Dubhaí, and the Western borders of Koel, Chandaus, Noh Jhíl, and Kosí.

The whole of the British territory to the Westward of this line is in their occupation. It might have been expected that a great portion of this would have been occupied by Sirsúti Brahmans, but they are not to be found in any numbers, except in a small tract on the borders of Rampúr.

The Jijhotias commence only in the South-West portion of Badausa, and thence extend Southward and Westward.

The Sarwarias, including the Bhúínhárs, touch the Kanaujias on the East, extending from Bahraich in Oudh, through the Parganahs of Kotíla, Hatgaon, Ekdalla, U'gasí, Darsenda, and Badausa, to the hills of Bundelkhand.

The name of Sarwaria is an abbreviation of Sarjúparia,* or people living in Sarwar, i.e., the other side of the Sarjú, or Gogra. Sarwar is pretty nearly comprised within the limits of the present district of Gorakhpúr. They say that they offended the great Ram Chandar, because they would not officiate at a sacrifice which he wished to perform without divesting himself of his arms. They refused, as this was contrary to the Shástras. The Sanaudhas, however, were not so scrupulous, and satisfied his desires. He subsequently respected the independence of the Sarwarias, and promised to give them as much land for their residence as the flight of his arrow would cover. The hero drew his bow on the banks of the Sarju, and the arrow, as is devoutly believed, sped as far as the Tarái. Hence that country was assigned to them, and from it they derive their name.

It is strange that a somewhat similar legend is told respecting the location of Brahmans and other colonists in Malabar. The traditions of the Peninsula relate that Parasurama stood on the promontory of Dilli, compelled the ocean to retire, and shot his arrow over the site of Kerala or Malabar, and presented the new territory to the colonists whom he invited from the North, and thus, to the present day, the Brahmans of Malabar and Kanara are most of the five Northern nations. (“Catal. of the Mackenzie Collection”).—See Jijhotia, Bhúinhár, and Gaur Brahman.

* * In the census of the N. W. P. in 1865 the Brahmans of the province are thus classified and enumerated :—

Drávir (Tamil)	75 in Fattihpúr
Tailang (Telugu)	231 Benares and Muttra
Maharáshtrí (Maráthi)	3,749 Cawnpore chiefly

* In the Jatimala, given in Price's “Hindí Selections,” Kanaujia Brahmans are divided into four clans; namely, Sarwaria, Sarjúparia, Jijhotia, and Sanaudha. But it is surely a mistake to divide the Sarwaria from the Sarjúparia. Perhaps by the former is meant the Kanaujia proper, for of this, the most important sub-division, no mention is made; but the Kanaujias would be very loth to acknowledge such a title.

Kanaujiyá	566,888	Kanauj in Cawnpore
Sáraswat.....	14,073	diffused
Gaur	170,182	do.
Ojha or Maithil (N. Behar)	8,479	Gorakhpúr and Jaunpúr
Utkal (Orissa)	43	Mirzapúr
Málwí.....	7,380	do.
Trivedi	2,538	Banda and Etawah
Gautam	10,895	Muttra and Allahabad
Jijhotia	22,731	Lallatpúr
Bharadwaji	34,808	Banda
Párikh	699	Murádabád
Sákhaldípí.....	2,258	Azimgarh
Pushkarná.....	121	Mirzapúr
Mathuriyá	1,583	Agra
Tiwárí	213,565	diffused
Sukul	64,371	do.
Misr	150,231	do.
Chaubé	59,993	do.
Dubé	132,612	do.
Pandé.....	167,735	do.
Upadhyá	75,007	do.
Sarwariá.....	102	Allahabad
Awasthí	5,155	Banda
Gujarati	6,427	Benares chiefly
Sanádh	163,993	diffused
Bhatt	610	Gorakhpúr and Benares
Banowa	935	do.
Kashmírí	719	Agra chiefly
Bargháiyán	20	Allahabad
Rikhepúrí	11	Allahabad
Nágar.....	1,180	Benares and Farrakhabad
Belhán	41	Allahabad
Páṭak	53,532	diffused
Bajpai	4,925	do.

} More numerous in the Eastern district than in the Western or Central.

Piási	20	Allahabad
Garrai	961	do. and Banda
Dikshit	51,085	Jhansi chiefly
Dhatúra	9	Allahabad
Gangáputr	6,161	do. and Farrakhabad
Demái	150	Muradábád
Shorduj	12	do.
Jhwási	9,894	Muttra
Trephallá	13	Jaunpúr
Kauli	1,082	Mirzapúr
Golápúrb	9,732	Agra
Paháriá	525	do.
Athwariá	59	do.
Katára	117	do.
Pandá	678	diffused
Aginhotri	933	do.
Tirgunáit	969	Farrakhabad, Etawa, and Jaunpúr
Ráwat	82	do.
Rájauriá	2,810	Etawa
Marwári	556	Jhánsí
Bhúinhár	52,199	Gorakhpúr, Benares
Naik	1,990	do.
Palná	13	Benares
Gandharb	677	do.
Kaṭak	78	do.
Bhát	78,351	diffused
Tagá	105,035	do.
Badowá	19	Allahabad
Dakauṭ	31,848	diffused
Mahabrahman	7,773	do.
Dosadh Brahman	159	Allahabad.

Total2,311,887

It will be seen that this classification is made according to the familiar local designations in use among the people, and takes no notice of their genealogical divisions into Gots. It is, however, all the more useful for that reason, as it shows the English reader what is the real practice among the people.

There is also a column in the returns headed Brahmans (without distinction), which is explained to mean those Brahmans whose special Got was not mentioned by the reporting officer. They number 1,198,216. The total number of Brahmans in these provinces thus amounts to 3,510,103.—See Census of N. W. P., 1865, published by authority, Vol. II., Table III.—B.

Kol,

कॊल कोल

A few of this primitive tribe are found in the province of Benares, particularly in the Southern part, and in Bundelkhand, near the hills. Their occupations are of a most servile kind.

Saktisgarh was formerly called after them Kolana, and the Parganah of Kol Asla in Benares still bears their name, and testifies to their former importance, before the Rajput immigrations.

From a consideration of the condition, habits, and position of the Kols of Benares and Behar, they may probably be found to have some connection with the Kolís of Guzerat, and the Kolaris of the South of India. I know not whether their languages have been ever compared; but there is no primâ facie improbability that they should be found to resemble each other; for the Moravian Missionaries of Amarkantak declared that they could converse with the Gonds of that neighbourhood in the Kanarese language, the origin of which is entirely distinct from the Sanskrit.* It is to be regretted that the sudden death of these excellent men, in the year 1842, prevented their giving public testimony to this interesting fact. If two countries so remote as Karnata and Amarkantak, between which there is no communion or commerce whatever, are found to have essentially the same languages, the Kols, Kolís, and Kolaris, between whom at least there is a resemblance of name, may be found to be similarly connected.

* It is now an established fact that the languages of the Kols and Gonds form a distinct non-Aryan family closely allied to the languages of the Dravidian family, Telugu, Tamil, and the rest.—B.

From the "Harivansa," Vol. I., p. 68, one might conclude the Kols to be of Rajput descent.

* * The best modern account of the Kols is in an article by Colonel Dalton, published at p. 153 of the "Ethnology of India," of which it forms by far the most valuable portion. ("J. A. S. B.," Vol. XXXV., Pt. ii. for 1866.)

The Kols live in Chota (or properly Chuttia) Nagpúr, the eastern portion of the extensive plateau of Central India, which is connected with the Vindhya range to the west, with an average height of over 2000 feet, and a climate less oppressive than that of the plains. Its area is about 7000 square miles, and its population about a million, more than half of whom are Kols. Col. Dalton asserts that this name was given to them as a term of reproach by the Brahmanical tribes. They fall into two great classes—Mundas and Uráons; of whom the former are traditionally said to have occupied the country first. Connected with the Mundas are the Sonthal, Bhumij, Khorewahs, Kheriahs, and Juangas or Pattuns (leaf-clad). A few of them have turned Hindus, but the mass preserve their old "mad" religion—devil-worship or whatever it be. The Uráons have a tradition that they were once settled in Guzerat, and there are reasons for believing this to be true. They call themselves "Khunkir." Their physical characteristics are different from those of the Mundas. They are very small in stature, but well-proportioned and dark-complexioned. It would be beyond the scope of this work, which is devoted to the N. W. Provinces only, to go into greater details, as the Kols scarcely touch at all on those provinces. The reader who is interested in the question is referred to the article above-mentioned.—B.

Kulí (Cooly), قلی कुली

A carrier, a porter. This word is in all probability derived from the Turkish Kullī قلی a slave, though that word is also known in Hindustan as the designation of several influential families who may have been originally slaves, but whose servile origin is now forgotten; or it may have been derived from the Kolis of Western India, as they were found to be frequently engaged in menial occupations.—E.

* * It is an error to say that kulí is the designation of any families in India. Mahomedans often give their sons names which, in respect of the final word, are the same as their own, and thus a semblance of a family name is established. Thus, Ali Razá will name his son Hasan Razá, and his son will be Muhammad Razá, and so on. It is in this way that we find the word kulí employed; as, e.g., Allah Kulí, son of Muhammad Kulí, son of Hasan Kulí, which only means that these gentlemen called themselves respectively slaves of God, of Muhammad, of Hasan, etc. The assumed connection of the word Cooly with the Kols is, I am convinced, quite imaginary. The ignorant munshis of the Lower Provinces, it is true, often spell the word कूली kūli, but they confess that they write it merely by ear; it always written قلی in the districts of the Panjáb and Western Provinces.—B.

Kurmí, کرمی कुरमी

A large class of cultivators in the Eastern and Central portion of this presidency, but there are few in Dehli and the Upper Doáb. Under the different names of Kurmí, Kumbhi, Kunabi, or Kúmbhí, they extend throughout the greater part of Hindustan, Berar, and the Dekkan.* They are famous as agriculturists, but frequently engage in other occupations. The Kurmí women, like the Játnís, assist the men in husbandry, and have passed into a proverb for industry,— भली जात कुंविन की खुरपी हाथ

खेत निरावे अपने पी के साथ

“A good caste is the Kunbin; with hoe in hand,
They weed the fields together with their husbands.”

The Kurmís of these provinces are said to have seven subdivisions, which are usually enumerated as Kharíbínd, Patarya, Ghorcharha, Jaiswar, Kanaujia, Kewat, and Jhúnaiya. These do not eat together or intermarry. The two first are chiefly in the Lower and Central Doáb, Benares, and Oudh. The Ghorcharha far to the Westward, the Jaiswar in Saugor and Bundelkhand, the Kanaujia in the lower parts of Central Doáb, the Kewat to the East of Benares, the Jhúnaiya to the West of the Upper Jumna. There are, however, other divisions which appear to be independent of these, as the Singraur and Chaparya of the Lower Doáb; the Jharí of Nagpore; the Ghameta, Samsawar, Kachisa, and Chandani of Behar; the Saithawar, Putanawar, Atharya, Chunanaun, and Akharwar of Gorakhpúr and Benares; the Rawat, Jadon, Bhartí, Kattiar, and Gangwarí of Rohilkhand. These also have no communion of food or marriage. In short, Kurmís are never agreed as to the seven tribes of which they are composed, and it is evident that they were never confined to that number.

There are several Kurmís, or Kumbis, among the Marattas,

* Those of the Dekkan are divided by Steele (p. 107) into Marathí, Kúnbí Waní, Kanári Kamatí, Tailang Kamatí, and Hindústani, amongst whom he includes Lodhí Pardesí and Chapparband. But Lodhís are not Kurmís, nor can we receive them as such on this authority: for it must be confessed that, however excellent the “Summary of Indian Classes” may be with respect to law, the second book, on the subdivisions of Castes, appears not to be executed with that care which the interesting nature of the subject required.

and the Gwalior, as well as the Satara families are of that stock. In our own provinces, we find Kurmís chiefly in the following Parganahs, Rudarpúr, Bísalpúr, Nawabganj, Pilibhít, Negohí, Ajaon, and Shahjehanpúr in Rohilkhand; Nidhpúr, Kanaujia, Bilhaur, Akberpúr, Shamsabad, Sikandra, Bhognípúr, Sheorajpúr, Sarh Salempúr, Dhata, Chaile, Ekdalla, and Ghatampúr in the Doáb; Aurangabadnagar, Sidhoa Jobna, Dhúreapara and Shahjehanpúr in Gorakhpúr; Seondha, Darsenda, Jalálpúr, and Kúneh in Bundelkhand; Khairagarh and Bari in Allahabad; Bhagwat, Bhoelí, Agorí Barhar and Singraulí in Mirzapúr; and Nathúpúr, Nizamabad, Sugrí, and Mahomedabad Gohna in Azimgarh.

In Oudh also there are several, and the notorious Darsan Singh has ennobled his tribe by the designation of Raja.

Kausik, کوسک कौसिक

A tribe of Sombansí Rajputs; but their name would seem to imply Brahmanical descent or connexion. Considerable numbers of them are in Deoganw, Mahul, and Gopalpúr in Azimgarh; Dhúriapar in Gorakhpúr; and in Chít Ferozpúr and Sayyidpúr Bhittrí in Ghazipur. In the Áin Akbarí they are recorded as the Zamíndárs of Jaunpúr, Kharíd, and Mariyahú. They pretend to derive their origin from Kusika, whose son, Gadhi, built Gadhipúr, or Kanauj. (See "Harivansa," p. 148, and "Vishnu Purana," p. 405.)

Kachhaurá, کچھورا कछोरा

A small clan of Rajputs, of which there are a few in Gorakhpúr.

Kachhwáha, کچھواہا कक्वाहा

Properly Kashwaha, being descended from Kasha, the eldest son of Rama. This tribe of Rajputs is now predominant in the territory of Amber, or Jaypúr, from which they expelled the Mínas and Baḍgujars. They also give name to Kachhwahagarh, a tract between the Sindh and Pahauj rivers, ceded by Gwalior in January, 1844, for the payment of the new British Contingent. There are a few in Muzaffarnagar, Belah, and Phaphúnd in Etawa; Sahár and Aríng in Muttra; Mahul in Azimgarh; Sakatpúr in Farrukhabad; and Anglí in Jaunpúr. They assert that they once held 360 villages in the neighbourhood of Muzaffarnagar. This may have been the case, for amongst those who went to aid the Chauhán Prince Bísal Deo, in his invasion of Guzerat, we find the Kachhwáhas of Anterbed enumerated, and as they are not found in any numbers elsewhere in the Doáb, except in Etawa, those of Muzaffarnagar are perhaps indicated; but they must have been in much greater strength than they are now, whether we consider them as occupants of Muzaffarnagar or Etawa, to have been honoured with any notice in such a gathering of Rajputs. (See Antarbed). The mention of the Kachhwáhas of Antarbed in the middle of the eleventh century is interesting, as showing that those of Amber had not yet risen into notice; and that those of Narwar, who are recorded by Chand as proceeding to the defence of Chittor in the beginning of the ninth century, must have been on the decline.

* * The story of the descent of the Kachhwáhas from Kusa, the son of Ráma, is evidently an idle fabrication of later days, concocted with a view to the aggrandizement of the tribe.

The word is, in all probability, a corruption of the Sanskrit Kachhapagháta, or "tortoise-killer," as the race is mentioned by this name in old inscriptions. Kachhapa becomes in Hindu Kachhúá, and há is derived from han, or killer, the nominative of which in Sanskrit is há (han and gháta are only different forms from the same root). This derivation, which is as nearly certain as any such etymologies can be, shows that this race is very ancient. Their original seat was Kuntipura, or Kutwár. One of their kings, Suraj Sen, is alleged to have founded the city of Gwalior, forty miles South-East of Kutwár, and they became independent under Vajra Dáma, one of whose inscriptions is dated A.D. 977. They retained the sovereignty of Gwalior, together with that of Narwar, till 1129, when Tejkaran, “the bridegroom prince,” as he is called, eighty-fourth in descent from Suraj Sen, left his capital of Gwalior, and went to Deora, to marry the king’s daughter of that place, and was so charmed with her society that he never returned. His nephew Parimál, a Parihára, supplanted him in Gwalior and Narwar. The Kachhwáhas then migrated to Dundár (or Jaipúr, as it was subsequently called), where they established themselves a new principality (Cunningham, Report, Part IV., pp. 27, 51, etc.)—B.

Kachhwár, کچھوار कछवार

See Kurmí, of which tribe they are a sub-division.

Kasbhará, کسبھرا कसभरा

Is the designation of the class which works in bell-metal; from कानसा kánsa, bell-metal, and भरना bharná, to fill. They are also employed in fusing precious metals, and making ornaments which require to be formed in moulds. They comprise one of the sub-divisions of Sonars, or goldsmiths, of which the others are Mathuriá, Mair, Khattrí, Kamethika, Lahauria, Púrbiyá, Kanaujia, Máhaur, Mahamania, Agaria, Birpúria, Chhainiwán, and Mangoria. Of these the Mathuriá ranks the highest. Kasbhará is below them all.

It is not generally known that amongst these tribes there is a secret language which is adopted for the purpose of concealing their fraudulent acquisition of property. Many, even of those deemed most respectable, are accessories to thefts and robberies; for nearly all the precious metals, obtained by the craft and dishonesty of others, fall ultimately into their hands, for the purpose of being melted down and formed into some other shape.

As their slang vocabulary is very difficult to obtain, and its existence even is commonly denied by the parties who use it, a few words are subjoined in a note,* but it is of much

* SLANG VOCABULARY OF INDIAN METALLURGISTS.

Damisahu,	Speak.	Bajna,	A Rupee.
Neet,he hohu,	Be quiet.	Talee,	Eight Annas.
Mat,h,	A house.	Badilla,	Four Annas.
T,hag,hatu,	Sit down.	Cheeta,	Two Pice.
* Cheeta lawahu,	{ Fix a little wax at the bottom of the seale.	Sariya,	One Pice.
* Chimaree jin la- wahu,	{ Do not make crooked the pin of the bal- lance.	Poochhariha,	Half a Pice.
Lao karau,	See.	Sowhan,	Quarter Pice.
Pat,hau,	Beat.	Soobaree,	A Dumree.
* Sagawahu,	Return it.	Hoorooke,	A Cowrie.
* Jhas karahu,	{ To do a thing so that some benefit may accrue from it.	Tora,	One Tolah.
* Poot,h toongeo,	Weigh it correctly.	Mala,	One Masha.
* Bag,hat toongeo,	{ Weigh it so as it may be less.	G,hooree,	A G,hoonchee .
* Bearas toongeo,	{ Weigh it so as it may be more.	Indra,	Camphire.
* Kit kira jin ka- rahu,	{ Do not change the weight.	Bhoos,	Mouth.
Boolace,	An Ushurfee .	Nadik,	Belly.
Gandhanu,	Gold.	Sat,ha,	Cloth.
Kooloo,	Brass.	Gowna,	Legs.
Bhasooa,	Justa .	Hut,hna,	Hands.
Kyanu,	Ranga .	Lanjhee,	Fish.
Gariyara,	Lead.	Tiratiya,	Meat.
Karasooa,	Iron.	Soong,hnee,	{ Nose; also the nose jewel.
Parikaha,	A Rupee.	Manu,	One.
		Sownan,	Two.
		Ekwaee,	Three.
		Ahirin,	Four.
		Palo,	Five.
		Poochhuree,	Six.
		Pynt,	Seven.
		Karha,	Eight.

* These expressions are used by them when weighing stolen property brought them by thieves, and enable them to rob the robbers successfully.—B.

larger extent than this limited extract might lead one to suppose.

Korag,	Nine.	Nat,h,	A Village.
Agoor,	Ten.	Soong,hna,	A Dog.
Soot,	Twenty.	Najoor,	A large Well.
Bheedu,	An Hundred.	Najoharee,	A small Well.
Tik,hariha,	{ Sah (a respectable person).	K,hajoor,	Wheat.
Kotu,	A thief.	Sekooree,	Paddy.
Hariyara,	One Beera of Pán.	Larihaddra,	Arhur.
Bhasuka,	} Tobacco.	Phalehra,	Gram.
Phanphee,		Bhasee,	Mud or Earth.
Lodhikaru,	Goor.	Raresika,	Salt.
Karsoodhee,	A Sword.	K,hoosan,	A Brahman.
Karsingee,	A Buffalo.	Liharu,	A Rajpút.
Bakrasu,	Milk, and Buttermilk.	Makar,	A Villager.
Sondkaha,	Ghee.	Kong,	A Musulman.
Nanwikaha,	Oil.	Selu,	A Buniya.
Tapooee,	Bread.	Phitkara,	A Washerman.
Nik,harahu,	Eat.	Maska,	A Kayeth.
Loree,	Fire.	Chooskar,	A Kulwar.
Laree,	Wood.	Tae har,	A Lodh.
Bersiya,	Meat.	Lariteona,	A Carpenter.
Memna,	A Goat.	Memanaha,	A Shepherd.
Bakahoonwa,	Bullocks.	Baraph,	A Brahman.
Gowk,ha,	Paper.	Jholahra,	A Bhoonjwa.
Kiaree,	A Bed.	Piskaru,	A Bhat.
Loree jin ootaroo,	{ Do not put it in the fire.	Rhabaja,	A Weaver.
Loorhow,	Sleep.	Pariparu,	A Barber.
Biarho,	Sing.	Sabhar,	An Assembly.
Najooa,	Water.	Oolgar,	Disgrace.
Hariyan,	A Tumbole.	Teonee,	Hire.
Lodhikaha,	A Hulwae.	Toogna,	Scales (for weighing).
G,hoorkan,	A Pasee.	Rasoora,	A Horse.
Kajaree ka teona,	A Singer.	Dobhikaru,	A Tailor.
Karasooabar,	A Blacksmith.	Dhatoorahu,	Go.
Niknarchhata,	A Baree (a link boy).	T,hawana,	An old man.
Totookar,	A Leper.	T,hyat,ha,	Father.
Lajihanu,	A brass pot.	T,hent,hee,	Mother.
Masbeta,	A Koomhar (Potter).	Badhooka,	Brother.
		Choonwa,	Son.
		Kootee,	Wife.

Tomar,

تومر तोमर*

This ancient royal race of Rajputs is now but scantily represented in these provinces. There are about 3,000 of them in Agra, and a mere handful in each of the districts of Banda, Jhansi, and Farrukhabad.

We first hear of them in anything like authentic history in A.D. 736, when Bilan De, or Deo, also called Anang Pál, the Tomar, rebuilt Dehli, and established there his capital. He was succeeded by eighteen sovereigns of his race, who sat on the throne successively till 1153, when Visala Deva, better known by the popular corruption of his name into Bisal Deo, the Chauhán, conquered Dehli. Anang Pál II., however, the then king, appears to have been retained in power as a subordinate to the conquering Chauhán, who proceeded to subdue the rest of Northern India. Bisal Deo's son, or grandson, Samesar, married Anang Pál's daughter, and from this union sprang the chivalrous Prithí Raja, the hero of Chand Bardai's celebrated epic poem, who sat on the throne of Dehli till con-

Kansee,	Bad.	Byjanat hai	{ He knows the language
Katamb,	Labourers.		{ of the Goldsmiths.
Sedhahu,	To dress.	Tarooa,	A Goldsmith's bag.
Kasaree,	{ (Dhar) Large Ear-	Tachu,	{ Belonging to the legs rings.		{ (such as shoes, etc.)
Gark,ha,	{ Silver Necklace	Oochhmioa,	An Elephant.
	{ (Huslee).	Beroee,	A Woman.
Hat,hna,	{ Bangles and arm or-	Lowkarat hai,	He is seeing.
	naments.	Ak,hilat hai,	He is joking.
Gawanee,	Feet ornaments.	Kodee,	Theft.

These words are not given by the author in the original character, and are apparently written according to the Gilchrist system. I have not ventured to alter the spelling, except in a few instances where the words are such as I have heard used. A few of the words in the above list are merely reversed from Hindi; as náth, a village, which is simply thán said backwards; gaukha paper for gazkha, from kághaz, etc.; but the principal part of them are pure inventions. Many Indian tribes use such vocabularies, as the Naṭs, the Ramúsís, and others.—B, quered by the Musulman invader, Shahábu'ddín, when the dynasty came to an end.

* Also often written तूमर and तुमर.

The Tomars make no mark in history after this till the reign of Aláu'ddín Khilji, or shortly after the death of that sovereign,* when Bir Singh Deo, an obscure Tomar, became possessed of Gwalior, which had been previously held successively by the Kachhwáhas, the Parihárs, and the Muham-madans.

After him a long line of illustrious princes ruled, subject more or less to Musulman influence, among whom Dungar Singh (1425-1454) is noteworthy, inasmuch as in his reign the celebrated rock-sculptures of Gwalior were executed. They appear to have been sometimes at feud with, and sometimes faithful allies of the Musulman rulers of Dehli. The princes of the house of Lodi, Bahlol, Sikandar, and Ibrahím, attacked and defeated them, or were defeated by them several times in those troublous and unsettled ages. The strong fortress of Gwalior, however, more often defied the Mughal forces. Raja Mán Singh (1486-1576) was a prince of great power and ability, and in his reign the power of the Tomars was at its height. He was a wise ruler, a patron of the arts, and himself a skilful musician, and a beneficent administrator. Under his successor, Bikramajit (Vikramaditya) the fortress of Gwalior succumbed to the Musulmans under Azim Humayun, and the Raja was captured and sent to Agra, where, though treated with honour, he sank into an ordinary Jagírdar (A.D. 1518). Vikramaditya fell at the battle of Panipat, fighting by the side of Ibrahím Lodi, his suzerain, in 1576. His troops held the fort of Agra, but yielded to Bábar, to whom they presented some valuable jewels, including a famous diamond, once the property of Aláu'ddín, which is supposed to be the same as the since famous Koh-i-núr. From this time forth, though the Tomar chiefs are still regarded by the people as the Rajas of Gwalior, they appear to have sunk into mere Zamíndárs, and finally emigrated to Udaypúr, where their descendants are still living.

* The date, according to General Cunningham, is 1357, which, as Alá died in 1315, would be after his death. There is still some uncertainty as to the actual date, as all the chroniclers, according to the above-mentioned authority, agree in placing Bir Singh's rise in the reign of Alá.—B.

From the ease with which these Rajput families rose into power, and sank again into insignificance, often without any sensible diminution of their numbers, it will be seen that many of the proud family names of the caste, such as Chauhán, Chandel, Tomar, Solankhi, and others, do not indicate for the bearers of them any real distinctiveness from the other septs or tribes of Rajputs, but that so far from being separate castes they are merely families, who probably all had a common Kshatriya origin, though legends of all degrees of extravagance were invented for them when in power, by adulatory bards, with the view of proving that in their veins ran some special "sangre azul," not possessed by their caste-fellows. (See Dahal in Part IV).—B.*

* The whole of this account, with some trifling exceptions, is compiled from various parts of General Cunningham's Report on the Archæological Survey of India.—B.

APPENDIX A.

NUMERICAL STRENGTH AND DISTRIBUTION OF THE CASTES OF THE HINDUS IN THE NORTH-WESTERN PROVINCES, AS SHOWN BY THE CENSUS OF 1865.[By the Editor.]

TWICE since the original publication of this work, a census of the North-Western Provinces has been taken, in 1853 and again in 1865. The latter census has been carried out on a very comprehensive system, and a special section is devoted to the various castes.

As Sir H. Elliot did not continue his work beyond the letter K,* many castes were necessarily omitted whose names began with letters from M to Z. It is not in my power to complete the work for the reasons mentioned in the preface; but as the census papers include every district in these provinces and every caste in each district, I hope by giving an analysis of them to supply much of the deficiency, as well as to bring the work down to the present time.

It will be observed that the classification of the different castes adopted in the census differs very much from Sir H. Elliot's. In the first place, Manu's old fourfold division of the people into Brahmans, Kshatriyas, Vaisyas, and Sudras has been introduced. This is a most inopportune piece of pedantry or ignorance, I know not which, and has had the effect of very much diminishing the value of an otherwise admirable report.

* It was really only done as far as J, but under an improved system of spelling, the words which he put under C now come under K.

As regards the Brahmans, they are still as they have ever been, Brahmans, and very little harm results from the use of Manu's division in their case. As to Kshatriyas, the Rajputs claim, and with justice apparently, this title, but no other class has any shadow of a claim. The Játs and Gujars, indeed, were probably of Rajput origin, but not of pure blood, and so could not rank as Kshatriyas. The Vaisyas, I have always been told by well-informed natives, are extinct, with the exception of a small body of Bais Baniahs in Oudh, whose claim, however, is doubted by some. Sudras, as such, no longer exist by name in Northern India. The so-called Sudras of Madras owe their name to their Brahman converters, who place their Dravidian converts in the lowest rank of their social system, as it then stood.

The attempt made by the early Indian lawgivers to divide society into classes, which should hold no communication with each other, was one which broke down at a very early period. Even in India "love will still be lord of all," and intercourse between men and women of different castes very soon occurred, to puzzle and disgust the sages who were (or would be) superior to human passions. They adopted the plan of placing the issue of such intercourse below the four original castes, and thus in time a great number of so-called mixed or impure castes arose, mention of whom occurs even in Manu himself. The result of this, at first sight, cruel arrangement, has been highly beneficial. It is like the process in nature by which granite rocks are disintegrated by the slow and constant action of the elements till they form fertile soil. It was all very well for priest and sages to say that the offspring of a man and woman of different castes was impure, and to rank him below the Sudra, but, in practice, a man who had a Brahman or a Rajput for his father was not likely to be ashamed of it, or to be looked down upon by his fellow men. Hence it came to pass that no man was ashamed of his caste. The Sudra, starting from a position of degradation, found himself above the sons of Rajputs and Vaisyas, and the mixed classes were proud of their connection, left-handed though it were, with the highest castes. Thus one of the great evils of caste, the elaborate system of social degradation prepared for the lower ranks, became impossible, and the barriers between caste and caste once overstepped, that mixture and fusion of the people began which has gone on to our own day, and promises to continue till there shall, in some happy and perhaps not far distant future, be no remnant of caste left.*

In the present time, then, there are no Sudras and no Vaisyas; no Kshatriyas except the Rajput. Only the Brahman is recognizable. The lower castes fused more readily than the higher, and the Sudras probably were soon absorbed in the mixed classes, and ceased to have any distinct existence as Sudras.†

* A laconic modern proverb in North Behar says, “Ját bhât,” that is, “caste is rice,” i.e., merely an affair of eating or not eating with others. This proverb is, I take it, one of the hopeful signs presaging, like the Brahma Samâj, a new and better order of things in India.

† I do not pretend to have said anything new in the above remarks, but it was necessary to say so much to prove my argument against the revival of the old fourfold division. Moreover, I by no means wish to be understood as believing that the Brahmanical theory was ever an established fact. Modern researches are upsetting so much of what the Sanskrit writers tell us, that one would not be surprised to find that the Sudra, as a caste, never existed at all, save in the minds of recluses and Pandits. May not the Cheru and Bhar and others be the Sudras after all? Non-Aryans, too powerful to be at once cast out and subdued, and therefore consigned to an infinite depth of social ignominy, if they should ever catch them, by scolding Brahmans. But did they ever catch them? My argument above is founded upon the old received belief that the four original classes did really exist, simply because all I want to prove is, that even if they ever did exist, they do so no longer, and that it is impolitic and pedantic to resuscitate the memory of them. If they did not exist, it is still worse to introduce them, and so to revive a pestilent Brahmanical dream, which for many centuries has wrought untold evils on Indian society.

This being the case, why at the present day revive in an official publication an obsolete system, which while it existed was baneful, and which has long ceased to have any practical meaning? The only result of so doing is that the compilers have had to ignore the existence of the mixed classes altogether, and to place among Sudras those who on their own system would rank below them. In the following analysis I shall as far as possible ignore this Sudra and Vaisya system altogether.

A second point which it is necessary to notice, is the nomenclature of the divisions of the different castes. Sir H. Elliot, in publishing the results of his own enquiries, was able to group the clans of Rajputs and others without reference to local names, but in the census each collector of a district sends in his own return, and being as a rule very busy, and probably rather indifferent, besides knowing little of any district save his own, he enters or allows to be entered in his return, all sorts of local names, without reference to the real or universal name of the family. This makes the analysis difficult to execute, and still more difficult to reconcile with the text. Explanatory notes will, however, be added, with a view to simplify the matter as far as possible. In defence of the district officers it may be said that as a rule local names for the divisions of castes are very prevalent, and in many instances, among the lower orders especially, supersede the real names, so that though Sir H. Elliot, with the means at his disposal, could comprise the whole province in one view, and place the various tribes and clans in their proper connection, a district official would find it very difficult to do this.

I must also notice that there is considerable want of uniformity in these returns. In some districts the census is divided according to Parganahs, in others only one figure for the whole district is given; the divisions of castes also differ very much.

I mention all this to account for any irregularities that may be apparent in the following analysis, to which I now proceed.

1. Brahmans. A full list of these will be found under the head of Kanaujia.

2. Rajput. The name Rajput only occurs once in the general tables of the census, though in the district returns it is of frequent occurrence, in many varieties of erroneous application.

Under the general head Kshatriya, 175 different clans are given. This arises from the fact that the table is compiled from all the district returns, and the same clan is known by one name in one district, and by a different one in another. Moreover, in one district the generic name will be given, in another the specific, but in the table they appear as two different classes. Thus one column gives us Súrajbansi, another Jais, though the latter are only a sub-clan of the Súrajbansis, known locally by this name in Muttra. To give in detail the whole 175 columns of the table would merely be to weary and puzzle the reader. I will therefore take this caste geographically, noting its divisions as they occur in each district. For a regular genealogical classification, the reader should refer to Tod's Rájasthán, which gives the best, though not a perfect summary of the ramifications of this royal race.

I. I begin with the Mírat division, which comprises the districts between the Ganges and Jumna, as far down as Aligarh, also the submontane dún or valley, of Dehra, in the Himalayas.

In Dehra dún there are—

Chandarbansís	29,324
Chauháns	67
Khattrí	281
Total	<hr/> 29,672

No attempt is made to give the various clans of the great Chandarbans or Lunar race.

In Saháranpúr, the next district going southwards, we have—

Rajput.....	230,108
Khattí	2,849
Chauhán.....	6,439
<hr/>
Total	239,396

Here the Rajput is treated as distinct from the Chauhán !

Muzaffarnagar, the next district, has—

Khattí	767
Shuniál (a local term)	18,114
Chauhán.....	2,245
Súrajbansí	2,819
Chandarbansí.....	2,233
<hr/>
Total	26,178

Shuniál, also written Shumál, occurs in no other district.

Mírat gives only Rajput 60,887

A note tells us that these Rajputs are principally Nirbhán, Gahlot, Tuar and Chauhán, but gives no details; oddly enough it adds, “there are no Súrajbansís, Rajbansís, etc.”

Bulandshahr, south of Mírat, has—

Rajput	79,099
Khattí	2,942
<hr/>
Total	82,041

with no specification of details.

Aligarh, south of Bulandshahr, gives—

Thákur or Rajput*	69,691
Khattí	588
<hr/>
Total	70,279

II. The division of Kamáon in the Himalayas contains the districts of Kamáon and Garhwal.

* All Rajputs all over India prefer to call themselves Thákur, or lord.

Kamáon has	204,285
Garhwál	30,963
Total	235,248

No details are given.

III. Rohilkhand is the province to the East of the Ganges, bounded on the North by the Himalayas, on the West and South by the Ganges, and on the East by Oudh.

Bijnor occupies the North-Western angle of this division.

Rajput	2,433
Chauhán.....	71,685
Khatrí	921

Total 25,039

The Chauháns of this district are stated to be “a collection of the lower branches of almost all the Kshatriya tribes,” and not the same as the royal Chauháns of Nimrána, Mainpúrí, etc. This is very likely true, as natives are fond of dubbing themselves by grand names, to which they could not establish a right.

This Bijnor return is very carefully executed, and gives many useful explanations.

Moradabad lies to the east of Bijnor, and gives a list of twenty Rajput clans, amounting to 33,632, and including among others

Badgújar.....	10,406
Kathairia	13,108

The other clans are—Pasnín 29, Janwár 106, Chandela 18, Powar 1,686, Sengar 29, Chauhán 495, Dikhat 55, Gaur 465, Gautam 1,284, Raghwar 28, Gahlot 16, Tumar 10, Parihar 11, Mehror (Maḍawar) 13, Gadhwár 10, Bais 125, Bhadauriá 25, Súrajbansí 203, Kachhwáha 17, Jadobansí 741, Rathaur 8, Báchhal 5, Dor 1,005, Pariwál 10, Kirár 1,371, and Khatrí 2,448.

Badáon, to the south and east of Moradabad, gives us briefly

Thákur	72,073
Khattí	287
Total	72,360

Bareli (Bareilly), the chief district of the division, lies north of Badáon, and exhibits

Thákur	42,320
Khattí	2,300
Total	44,620

Shahjahánpúr, the most eastern district of Rohilkhand, has also

Thákur	69,588
Khattí	1,384
Total	70,972

In the Rohilkhand tarai, or district under the Hills, are

Rájbansí	3,365
----------------	-------

III.—The Agra division includes the districts of the Central Doáb, and a considerable tract of country west of the Jumna, extending southwards to the Chambal.

Muttra (Mathurá), partly on the west of the Jumna and partly in the Doáb, is the most northerly district.

Rajput (unspecified)	40,439
Khattí	1,918
Chauhán	1,651
Jadon	23,433
Jais	7,306
Gauruah	22,460
Gahlot.....	9,894
Total	107,101

Agra, south of Muttra, and on both sides of the Jumna

(though chiefly west of it), contains forty-two clans of Rajputs, besides Thákurs lumped together en masse. The classification is avowedly imperfect, and not the same for the different Tahsils. It gives a total of 187,065, including about 23,000 Súrajbans, among whom are Sikarwar, Chauhán, Tuar, and Powar; also a curious item, "Rajputs 11,205," as though the others were not Rajputs. This comes of the fourfold division.

On the eastern side of the Doáb is Farrakhabad, with a total of 70,650 Rajputs in twenty-three classes, most of whom bear local names—but Chauhán 551, Bhadauria 138, Rahtor 31, Tuar 58, and Kachhwáha 72, occur among others.

Mainpúrí (Mynpoory) is in the centre of the Doáb, next to Farrakhabad, and gives Thákur	49,458

Kirár	6,527
	<hr/>
Total	55,985

The meagreness of detail in this district is disappointing, because there are here several important seats of the Chauhán and other principal Gots.

Etawa, south of Mainpúrí, and on both sides of the Jumna, gives more detail. The Rajput is there divided into

Súrajbansí—

Gahelwar Gahlot	1,012
Gaur	2,766
Rahtor	314
Raghbansí	571
Kachhwáha	5,692

Chandarbansí—

Chandel	145
Sonbansí	78
Jadon.....	111

Agnibansí—

Parihár.....	3,743
Powar	16*
Chauhán	15,300
Byás	651
Baghel	98
Sengar	6,368

Miscellaneous—

Thákurs	15,898
---------------	--------

Total	52,763
-------------	--------

Without expressing any opinion as to the correctness of this classification, it is clear that we have here a more intelligent grouping than elsewhere. We do not find Rajputs treated as separate from Chauháns, and such like eccentricities.

Etah is a small district north of Mainpúrí, and gives Thákur	53,132

Khatrí	127

Total	53,259
-------------	--------

IV. The Allahabad division† includes the Lower Doáb, and some large tracts south and west of the Jumna, bordering on the independent states of Bundelkhand.

Kánhpúr (Cawnpore) is entirely in the Doáb, which here narrows considerably. The return is very elaborate. It exhibits fifty-seven descriptions of Kshatriyas, but many of the names are purely local, as “Cawnporeea;” others are apparently imaginary, as the Nekhats and Jerkas, of whom there are only 8 each, and who occur nowhere else. We also find “Chandarbansis” 6 only, though there are several thousands of sub-

* Only in Parganah Phappúnd.

† I have omitted the Jhansi division, as it is, strictly speaking, only a sort of out-rider to the N.W.P., and is not under the general regulations.

sidiary got's of the Lunar race enumerated. The total number of Rajputs is 130,347.

Fattihpúr, the next district going down the Doáb, gives—

Súrajbansí	9,125
Chandarbansí	14,434
Dikhit	7,303
Gautam	13,538
Bais	8,302
Sirkí (only in Haswa Parg.)	11
Gaur	1,727
Khetri	491
<hr/>
Total	54,931

Banda lies west of the Jumná, and south of Fattihpúr, and has twenty-nine clans of Kshatriyas, including "Rajput or Chattrí" 9,389, different from whom apparently in the writer's mind are Bais, Baghel, and others. The total is 64,635, and the list includes—

Baghel	1,123
Bais	15,480
Kachhwáha	756
Dikhit	9,429
Gautam	3,140
Chandel	583
Gaur	4,333
Powar	2,712

with other minor and doubtful clans.

Allahabad, the chief place of the division, and capital of the North-West Provinces, is the principal town of a district lying at the apex of the Doáb, and on both sides of the Ganges and Jumna, both above and below their junction. The same absurd system of nomenclature exists; we have Rajputs side by side with Súrajbansí, Chandarbansí, Powar, Chauhán, etc., all disinct, besides three persons called Mungaráhas, who exist nowhere else. The total is 57,647. It is not surprising to find mention of castes which we hear of nowhere else, at such places as Allahabad, Benares, Muttra, and even Cawnpore,—because, these being places of great sanctity, many devout Hindus, from all parts of India, go there on pilgrimage, and many, when they feel themselves getting old, leave their homes and take up their abode permanently in Muttra or Benares, in order to secure the spiritual advantages which they believe will result from dying in those sacred spots. As some of these men come from the Mahratta country, others from the South of India and such-like distant places, they do not belong to any of the clans known in the N. W. P., and hence we get isolated names represented by two or three individuals only.

Hamírpúr, which lies above Banda, west of the Jumna, has 44,202 Rajputs, in twelve classes:—Súrajbansí, Raghubansí, Chandarbansí, Bais, Baghel, Parihár, Powar, Chauhán, Sikh Rajput, Solanki, Gaur, and Khatrí.

V. Gorakhpúr is an extensive district lying between Oudh on the west and the Gandak on the east, the Himalayas on the north, and Gogra and Behar to the south. It contains 123,328 Rajputs in twenty-nine classes, but badly arranged. Chandarbansís are put down as “nil,” though several Lunar Gots are given immediately afterwards.

VI. Benares gives its name to a division occupying the south-eastern part of the North-West Provinces, having Oudh and Gorakhpúr on the north, Behar on the east, and the independent states of Bundelkhand on the south.

Azimgarh, the most northern of the districts of this division, exhibits sixty-six classes of Kshatriyas, many of whom contain only a few families, and seem peculiar to this district, such are—

Bhrigubans.....	24
Bargaiyan	451

Sangjál	236
Sawahya	30
Láhút	35
Pachotaría	8

These most probably are really offshoots from some more celebrated clans. The total of Rajputs in this district is given at 171,480, but we must deduct from this 46,642 Bhúinhárs, who are not Rajputs at all, leaving 124,838 as the real total.

Jaunpúr is a small district west of Azimgarh, and shews fifty-seven Gots of Rajputs, one of which, called Turkmán, consists of two persons! another, the Khajái, of three! The most numerous are—

Bais.....	35,536
Raghubansí	30,493
Bachgotí.....	23,988
Nauwak	22,806
Chaupatkhamb (not in Elliot)	15,158

Total of all clans, 223,938, which is a very large amount for so small a district.

Mirzapúr lies south of the Ganges, and extends a long way into the independent states, and embraces much wild country along the Kaimúr range.

Twenty-four clans occur here. The Giharwár number 26,892, the Gautam 18,178; the total, deducting 4,241 Bhúinhárs, amounts only to 95,383, which is a small number for the size of the district, and considering its proximity to Rewa and Bundelkhand, with their large Rajput populations.

Benares is a small district on both sides of the Ganges round the sacred city. Twenty-seven clans amount to 54,445. The most numerous is the Raghubansí, 43,131, the least so the Bhanwag, which consists of one solitary specimen!

Ghazipur lies along the north bank of the Ganges as far as its junction with the Gogra (Deohá or Sarja) river, and contains 206,262 Rajputs.

Ajmer, a province in the centre of Rajputana, has 17,539 Rajputs.

I could have wished to exhibit a perfectly homogeneous table of this important caste, showing the ramifications of its numerous Gots, but the irregular, heterogeneous, and unsettled nature of the returns, and the want of any uniform system of nomenclature, has rendered this impossible. I can therefore only add that the grand total of Rajputs for the province is as follows:—

Mirat division	507,686
Rohilkhand do.....	249,528
Agra do.	526,853
Kamáon do.	235,248
Allahabad do.	351,762
Benares do.	804,871
Gorakhpúr	123,328
Ajmer	17,539

Total Rajputs in N. W. Prov. 2,816,815

In other words, a little short of three millions—or very nearly one-tenth of the whole population. The Dehli division is not included in this enumeration, as it has since 1857 formed part of the Lieutenant-Governorship of the Panjáb. The same remark holds good for the three districts of Hissar, Sirsa, and Rohtak, composing the division of Hissar. The population of these two divisions at the last Panjáb census amounted to 2,265,770, and the Rajputs probably numbered two hundred thousand out of the whole.

3. BHÚINHÁR.—This caste, which I have explained to be in reality bastard Brahmans, is sometimes classed with them and sometimes separate. In the N. W. P. they are found in the eastern districts only.

Gorakhpúr	30,739
Benares.....	21,460

Azimgarh	47,926
Jaunpúr	3,333
Mirzápúr	4,241
Total	107,699

4. JÁTS.—This important and wide-spread caste, which is in the census absurdly enough classed among Sudras, is stated to amount to only 682,712. This, I cannot but think, must be a mistake. There are many sub-divisions of Játs, and some of them may have been treated as independent tribes. The census returns, however, support Elliot's assertion that their region is chiefly the Upper Doáb, and it must be remembered that when he wrote, the Dehli division formed part of the N. W. P.

The districts in which Játs are most numerous are

Mírat.....	118,216
Muttra	120,494
Aligarh.....	76,689
Muzaffarnagar	75,694
Agra	66,538

They are extremely numerous under the name of Jāt in the Panjáb, where General Cunningham estimates them at four-tenths of the population, or about five millions.

5. GÚJAR.—These also come, according to our census compilers, under the head of Sudras. They number 264,496, and, like the Játs, side by side with whom they are always found, are settled chiefly in the Upper or North-western portion of the Provinces. They have in

Saháranpúr.....	51,855
Mírat	54,035
Bulandshahr	44,112

They have a very bad name in this district, where they were particularly troublesome and riotous during the Mutiny, plundering the town of Sikandarabad, and doing a deal of mischief. They and the Rángars of Dehli are unenviably notorious as being among the few rural populations who rose against us at that trying time.

Muzaffarnagar 17,315

Ajmer 32,270

The constant occurrence of Játs and Gújars in the neighbourhood of Rajputs, and the way in which, so to speak, they fill up the gaps between various settlements of the Rajputs, together with their fine physique and manly bearing, lends great support to the only really probable theory as to their origin, which supposes them to be offshoots of the great Rajput caste.

6. AHÍR.—Number, 2,196,786—over two millions. These are also, somewhat oddly, classed as Sudras. They rank high however as regards purity, and are probably partly of Brahman origin. They are especially numerous in the eastern part of these provinces, though well diffused over the whole,—there being five or ten thousand of them in nearly every district. Their profession of herdsmen secures them a certain respect wherever the sacred cow is worshipped, and the legendary connection of their caste with the popular god or demigod Krishna is still held in remembrance.

They are most numerous in

Gorakhpúr 408,903

Azimgarh 210,868

Ghazipúr 168,308

In those parts of Behar which are under the Government of the Lower Provinces of Bengal they are extremely numerous. Avoiding to some extent the agricultural and well-cultivated parts of the country, they are to be found in immense numbers wherever there are vast grassy plains for their herds, as in the wide jungles of Gorakhpúr, and the equally wild plains of Northern Behar, and as far east as Purneah.

7. KÁYATH.—This class is known as the “writer” caste. They are the clerks and men of the pen all over India. Their tradition is that when Parasu Rama destroyed the Kshatriyas, the pregnant women of that caste fled, and the children to whom they subsequently gave birth having been concealed during the massacre in the wombs of their mothers, were called Káyasths (Sansk. कायः body स्था remaining). They are a fine handsome race, with delicate intellectual features, and some of the cleverest natives of India have sprung from their number. In Lower Bengal, especially, they are distinguished by the rapidity with which they acquire a wonderfully perfect knowledge of the English language, and of European literature. They are the “Greeks of the lower empire,” subtle, clever, intellectual, but wily and treacherous. Perhaps no race in India has so eagerly responded to the attempts which have been made to civilize, in the European fashion, the natives of this country.

They are, however, also found as cultivators in many parts of the country, and in that capacity are, perhaps, not superior to their neighbours. Their numbers in the N.W.P. are 351,463. They are very equally diffused, though perhaps rather more numerous “down country,” or in the eastern part of the provinces.

In Gorakhpúr they number	39,689
Ghazipur	23,597
Bareilly.....	23,012
Allahabad	21,869

8. KURMÍ or KUNBÍ, amount to 971,285. They are more numerous in the lower or eastern districts than in the Central or Upper Doáb. They are, however, returned as amounting in Bareilly to 162,232, but

In Gorakhpúr	242,388
Allahabad	121,140

9. KACHHÍ, better known in the eastern districts as Koerí, also called Muráo, or Morái. The market gardeners of India, wonderfully industrious and neat, and skilful cultivators of all the finer kinds of produce. There are 1,348,316 of these useful people. They are tolerably equally diffused all over the provinces except in the Upper Doáb, where they seem scarce. In North and South Behar they are very frequent, and wherever the poppy is grown between Benares and Patna, they are found engaged in its cultivation and the production of opium from it.

To sum up these remarks, I exhibit in a brief tabular form the totals of the various castes. I do not attempt to give the whole of them, more especially since they are drawn out with elaborate and somewhat fanciful detail in the census. I include the castes treated of above, with several of the servile castes who are extremely numerous.

1. Brahman	3,510,103
2. Rajput	2,816,815
3. Bhúínhár	107,699
4. Ját.....	682,712
5. Gújar	264,496
6. Ahír	2,196,786
7. Káyath	351,463
8. Kurmí	971,285
9. Káchhí	1,348,316
10. Kewat	388,258
<hr/>
11. Teli * (oilman)	427,857
12. Sonár (goldsmith)	176,615
13. Lohár (blacksmith)	314,552
14. Baṛhái (carpenter)	301,471
15. Kumhár (potter)	453,614
16. Mali (gardener)	167,597
17. Hajjám or Náí (barber)	430,564
18. Dhimar or Kahár (bearer, also fisherman)...	693,519
19. Gaḍariyá (shepherd)	566,981

* I have drawn a line above these names, to shew that they are not, strictly speaking, castes, but professions or trades.

20. Bharbhúnjá	163,882
21. Lodhá	585,932
22. Kalwár (distiller)	262,884
23. Dhobí (washerman).....	270,568
24. Chamár (leather-worker and general drudge)	3,580,385
25. Mihtar (sweeper)	310,795
26. Nuniá * (saltpetre worker)	199,936
27. Baniás in general.....	383,202

* Chiefly in the Eastern districts, and in Oudh and Behar.

APPENDIX B.

NUMERICAL STRENGTH AND DISTRIBUTION OF THE MUHAMMADANS IN THE NORTH-WESTERN PRO-
VINCES, ACCORDING TO THE CENSUS OF 1865.[By the Editor.]

THE arrangement of the Musulman populations is a simpler affair than that of the Hindus. They fall into two great classes, of which the first consists of the descendants of foreign invaders, and the second of converts from Hinduism. This division is of course ignored to a great extent by themselves. Throughout Hindustan they recognize a fourfold classification, into Sayyid, Mughal, Pathán, and Shaikh.

The Sayyid, as claiming descent from the Prophet, is of course the most honoured of the four, he takes either the word Sayyid before his name, or in some places the title Sháh; the latter custom prevails more in the Panjáb and western parts of the Provinces, where the respectful form of address, "Sháh Sáhib" is used to all Sayyids of rank, and "Sháh jí" to others.

The Mughals are, as their name implies, descendants of the companions or followers of the Tartar conquerors of India. They are less numerous than the other classes, and in many cases still preserve a markedly Turanian type of countenance. They are generally known by the title of Beg affixed to their name, and often use the prefix Mir or Mirzá (shortened from Amírzáda, i.e., "son of a noble").

The Patháns are of Affghan origin, and are always known by the affixed title Khán.

The class of Shaikhs is a mixed one. Any ordinary Musulman who belongs to none of the three above-named classes, is called Shaikh. A vast number of the converts from Hinduism give themselves this title, which from being so promiscuously used has long ceased to have any special meaning or value as a title of honor.

The large populations in all parts of the North-Western Provinces who were originally Hindus, but are now Musulman, take great liberties with these titles; many affect the title Khán, and some go so far as to call themselves Sayyid, especially if they have attained high social position. In the Panjáb, where the process of conversion has been carried out on a very large scale, there used to be a proverbial couplet to this effect, supposed to be spoken by a convert—

“Last year I was a weaver, this year I am a Shaikh, Next year, if grain is dear, I shall be a Sayyid.”

meaning that if he sold his crops well, he should be wealthy enough to assume this latter title.*

The census classes the Muhammadans of these provinces under the four general heads given above, and gives besides a column of “miscellaneous Muhammadans,” including converts of all sorts. The analysis is as follows:—

1. SAYYID.—There are 170,248 of this class in these Provinces. They are most numerous in Muzaffarnagar, where there are counted 21,837 of them. It is in this district that the Gardezís are located. Bijnor and Moradabad contain respectively 10,285 and 16,439. Lower down, Allahabad has 11,558, Jaunpúr 12,771, and Gorakhpúr 10,078. In one or two districts the Musulman population has not been classified, so that something would have to be added to the above total to obtain the full number, say 10,000, so that we may fairly assume the Sayyid population to be 180,000 throughout the Provinces.

* Much amusement was caused, I remember, in 1860, at Gujrát, in the Panjáb, by the Sarrishtadar, or principal clerk of the judicial department, describing himself in an official return as “Sayyid Hášimí Kuraishí,” that is, of the family and lineage of the prophet. His father, who was living in obscurity in his native town, was discovered to be a lohár, or blacksmith.

2. MUGHAL.—There are stated to be 41,748 of this class, who are most numerous in Saháranpúr, where they amount to 8,370. There are more of them in the Upper Doáb and Rohilkhand than in other parts, but in no district except Saháranpúr are there more than four thousand of them. With regard to the Mughals it must be noted that they seem, as a class, to have amalgamated less with the native population than any others. They were of the clan of the conquerors, and fierce truculent Tartars to boot. From passages in the Institutes of Timúr, and other writings of the early Mahommadan invaders, we get an impression that the Mughals were rather unwilling participators in the plans of their sovereign. They had no objection to a raid on India, with a prospect of a speedy return to their steppes, but a lengthened sojourn in the plains of the Ganges seems to have been viewed by them with great aversion. Comparatively few, therefore, and they merely hangers on of the court, appear to have stayed on permanently in the country. The Mughals are often found holding very respectable positions, but are almost entirely, as far as I know, townspeople, not having any taste for rural pursuits.

3. PATHÁN.—This class is very much more numerous than either of the two preceding ones. But there is a possibility that many persons who do not properly belong to this head may have been entered under it. The favourite Pathán title of Khán is often adopted as a stepping-stone to that of Sayyid by ambitious plebeians, and in this way many have probably crept into this column of the returns who have no right to be there.

The Patháns, true or false, are set down at 515,526, or nearly three times the number of Sayyids.

They are very numerous in the Mírat and Rohilkhand divisions, as the following list shows :—

Saháranpúr.....	92,226
Muzaffarnagar	13,995
Mírat	13,634
Bulandshahr	39,171
Moradabad	18,926
Badáon	13,150
Bareilly	44,468
Shahjahanpúr.....	42,356

In Agra and Farrakhabad also they are found in considerable quantities, and are tolerably equally diffused over the whole province, though there is a marked diminution of their numbers in the Benares division.

4. SHAIKH.—I am in doubt about the way this class has been treated in the census. So many that are really not Shaikhs call themselves so, that I apprehend there has been much diversity of practice on this head. The Shaikhs are put down at 1,140,108. By this title we ought strictly to imply those Musulmans who, on the one hand, are neither Sayyids, Mughals, nor Patháns, and on the other are not Hindus converted to Islam. The Shaikh, properly so called, is the lowest class of the descendants of the invaders. He is often of Affghan descent, though his forefathers were not of sufficient social standing to acquire the title of Khán. There is also much Persian, Bokhariot, and Turki blood in his veins. Judging from the appearance of this class on the whole, one would say that the non-Aryan element preponderated considerably. I notice, however, in many districts, converted Gújars and others are entered under this head. Saháranpúr gives eleven classes of Shaikhs. Mírat gives Shaikhs “sprung from Patháns,” which is only true of some of them. Most districts draw a distinction between the four classes of true or original Musulmans and the long list of inferior or miscellaneous.

Saháranpúr contains the largest number of Shaikhs, 164,819. But there are few districts which have less than twenty or twenty-five thousand of them.

Below the four great classes, there is a large population described as miscellaneous Mahommedans. These are the converts from Hinduism, or more strictly speaking, the descendants in the ninth or tenth generation of such converts, together with those who follow certain petty trades in towns, and who are a very mixed multitude, not connected in any particular way with one another, save by the accident of following a similar trade. As the general tables of the census give no details of this motley rabble, whose numbers, however, amount to 2,207,576, or nearly two millions and a-quarter, it will be probably useful to give an analysis of them, as far as it can be extracted from the district returns.

1. Julláha.—This well-known class is that of weavers; they are as a rule poor and of little consideration. In some districts there are Hindu Julláhas also, but in most cases the term is applied to Musulmans only,—Hindu weavers being known by the names Tántí and Tatthiá.

They are located as follows:—

Mírat Division—

Dehra Dún.....	1,361
Muzaffarnagar	18,922
Mírat	29,457
Bulandshahr	9,558
Aligarh	1,844

Rohilkhand Division—

Bijnore	57,000
Moradabad	44,190
Bareilly	61,401

Shahjahánpúr.....	16,969
Tarai	3,520
Agra Division—
Agra	607
Etah	2,827
Allahabad Division—
Fattihpúr	3,282
Banda	182
Allahabad	33,875
Hamírpúr	915
Benares Division—
Azimgarh	51,973
Jaunpúr	21,125
Mirzápúr.....	19,774
Benares	23,711
Ghazipur	46,268
Total	449,661

Those districts whose names are not found in this list are those in which the Julláhas are not specified by name.

2.—Nái or Hajjám (barber).—This caste, like the Julláhas, is both Musulman and Hindu, and is found in every village in the country. The barber is an important person at betrothals and weddings, though of more consequence among the close-shaven Hindus than the bearded Musulmans. They are often found employing themselves in agriculture.

They are settled as follows :—

Dehra Dún	86
Muzaffarnagar	7,239
Mírat	10,263
Bijnore(about)	10,000
Moradabad	11,308
Bareilly	20,188

Tarai	570
Agra	21,574*
Etah	396
Cawnpore	18,950*
Fattihpúr	1,243
Banda	13,849
Hamírpúr	123
Azimgarh	3,950
Jaunpúr	2,243
Mirzapúr.....	1,426

3. Bihishtí (vulgo Bhisti), water-carrier.—These are the men who carry water in goat-skins for the supply of the upper classes. They are chiefly found in towns, and are also called Máshkís, from the Mashak, or water-skin, and Sakká.

Dehra Dún.....	70
Muzaffarnagar	3,689
Mírat	7,569
Aligarh	10,512
Bijnore	2,603
Moradabad	4,061
Bareilly	3,041
Tarai	299
Agra	14,308
Fattihpúr	331
Allahabad	591
Hamírpúr	29

The Bihishtí is generally found in the service of Europeans, but his trade is not in much request, as most people draw their own water. The word Bihishtí means literally an inhabitant of “Bihisht,” or paradise, and the name is said to have been applied to them by the Mahomedan invaders, either in derision, or from the relief they gave to the thirsty soldiery.

* In the return it is stated that some of these are Hindus and some Musulmans, but it is not known how many belong to each religion.

3. Kassáí, or Kassáb, butcher.

These are thus given:—

Dehra Dún	132
Muzaffarnagar	10,420
Mírat	15,376
Aligarh	4,154
Bijnore	6,442
Moradabad	9,179
Bareilly	5,933
Tarai	442
Agra	3,376
Etah	2,251
Fattihpúr	1,191
Allahabad	4,157*
Hamírpúr	7*
Azimgarh	1,740
Jaunpúr	883
Mirzapúr.....	661
Benares	1,089*
Ghazipur.....	1,652

6. Rangrez, or dyer.—This is like the Julláha, a very useful and wide-spread class. They are found in all the large towns.

There are in—

Mírat	4,127
Bijnore	2,063
Moradabad	2,270
Bareilly	2,488
Agra	515†

* Locally known as Bakar kassáb, i.e., ox-butcher.

† The Agra return is careless in these points. I suspect this figure is too low by half.

Etah	579
Allahabad	979
Azimgarh	1,281
Mirzapúr.....	3,227
Benares	609
Ghazipur.....	1,099

In addition to this there are several large classes of Musulman Dhobis (washermen), Darzís (tailors), and others, who are mentioned in some returns but not in others. I give their names only; an approximation to their total numbers is all that it is possible to offer.

Halwái, confectioner	15,000
Dhuniá, cotton-carder	70,000
Mi'amár (معمار), builder	12,000
Bhṭṭiyára, serai-keeper	8,000
Tawáif (طوائف), prostitute	15,000
Kiltibán, pimp and cinædus (also called Kaláwat or Bharúá)	1,500
Kunjrá, vegetable seller	18,000
Dhobi, washerman	30,000
Telí, oil-seller.....	55,000

The total of Musulmans is 4,075,206 against 25,971,420 Hindus, or nearly in the proportion of one to six and a-half.

PART II.

CUSTOMS, RITES, AND SUPERSTITIONS.

[This Part has been constituted in accordance with the fourfold division of the work mentioned by the author. The number of articles it contains is, however, small; and I have experienced some difficulty in deciding what articles should find a place in this Part, as being illustrative of customs, rites, and superstitions. It has not been found possible in practice to draw the line accurately, and the reader is therefore requested to refer to Part IV. for any words he may not find in this Part.—B.]

Ajaulí, اجولي अजौली

Perquisite of the lower castes, from the threshing-floor.—Benares. The word may perhaps be derived from Anjalá or Anjalí, i.e., as much as one can carry in two hands joined.

Akhtíj, اکھتیج अखतीज

The 18th day of the month Baisakh, upon which frequently the obligations incurred by the agriculturists to enable them to provide for the cultivation of the Rabí season are adjusted, on the principle explained in the article Bara-bhao.

The Bara-bhao system prevails most to the East, and Akhtíj ka Bhao to the West. The Akhtíj is to the Rabí what the Dewalí is to the Kharíf—the day appointed for settling the accounts of the past harvest. It is proper to commence the manufacture of agricultural implements, and to feed Brahmans on the Akhtíj, as well as to eat new grain, which scrupulous men generally forbear doing till the return of this auspicious festival. A plough is also slightly passed over the fields, as the ceremony is supposed to secure good luck ; but to sow seed on that day, except on certain conditions, is expressly forbidden in the points and precepts of some Oriental Tusser.

पोई माउस मूल विन विन रोहिनी खेतीज
स्रवण सलोनी वारि क्यू वखेरे बीज

The name of this festival is derived from अ not, ज्ञय decay, and तीज (तृतीय) third ; the undying 3rd of the lunar half of Baisakh ; or 18th, according to the usual computation : “The consequences of meritorious actions performed on this day being permanent, as it is the first day of the Satya Yuga, or the anniversary of creation.”—Sanskrit Dict. p. 4.

Angaungá, انگونگا अंगौला

Perquisites from the threshing-ground to the Brahman, Purohit, Guru, Grazier, and Village God.—Benares.

In the North-West, the corresponding term is Siyáudí or Thapa ; and Anjalí in Bundelkhand.

From the time of distributing the Angaungá to that of weighing, a deep silence is observed, and strangers are carefully excluded. A short time since, a party of peasants engaged in this operation were brought before the magistrate for conniving at a criminal's escape ; whereas, they had merely made a sign to him to keep off, and not profane the ceremony with his unhallowed presence.

In Dehli, and the North-West, as well as in some parts of Benares, this deep and mysterious silence is observed at an earlier stage of the proceedings. When the corn is ready to be formed into a heap, a man seats himself down with a ploughshare in his hand, which he digs into the ground, and which is supported on each side by some kús grass and cowdung. Another person from behind then throws some corn over the head of the man sitting on the ground, who employs himself in carefully adjusting it around the ploughshare, taking care all the time to keep it as much as possible concealed from the gaze of inquisitive persons. When it is well covered, he gets up, and every one present assists in forming the heap. This is the Dehli custom.

In Rohilkhand a somewhat different ceremony is observed. After burning a hom, or a little sacrificial fire, a ploughshare and a pot full of water are placed to the north of the pole round which the bullocks are driven when treading out the corn. The heap of corn is then raised to the south of the ploughshare, and not over it, as in Dehli. The subsequent proceedings will find a more appropriate place under Chánk.

But in whatever way the ceremony is observed, during the whole time the strictest silence is observed, and is not to be broken within the threshing-ground until the corn is measured out and distributed.

It would be deemed unlucky were any talking to take place; even if an articulation or ejaculation of any kind were made, mischievous sprites would come, and extract much of the strength and substance of the corn.

It is from the apprehension of a visit from these malignant goblins that the agriculturists of these provinces commence forming their heaps of winnowed corn either exactly at twelve in the day time, or shortly after twelve at night, at which times sprites are said not to wander.

If the work is begun in the day time, and not over by sunset, the party retire from the threshing-ground, and do not recommence operations till starlight; the intermediate period being very inauspicious.

Angauriyá, انگوریا अंगौरिया

A ploughman. Allowing the use of a plough, instead of paying wages in money or kind.—Benares.

This practice is called Jítrá in Bundelkhand and Rohilkhand.

Anjalá, انجلا अंजला

As much as can be held in the cavity formed by joining the two hands together in the shape of a bowl.

Anjalí, انجلی अंजली

This has the same meaning as Anjalá, but is current chiefly in Bundelkhand. It is also applied to a mode of salutation by carrying the hands in this form to the forehead.—See also Angaungá.

Anúá, انوا अनूआ

The place where men stand who throw the Daurí (which see).—See also Berí and Boka (Part IV.).

Annaprásan, انپراسن अन्नप्रासन

The first feeding of children with grain; from the Sanskrit अन्न anna, corn, and प्रासन prásan, feeding; also called in some places पसनी pasní, which appears to be merely a corruption of the above words.

The Pasní takes place (see "Menu," II. 34) usually six months after birth. It is an important ceremony with a Hindi child, who is then considered to enter on a new stage of life.

अन्नमूल प्राण । प्राणमूल पुरुष । पुरुषमूल हरमजदगी

"Corn is the staple of life, life is the origin of man, and man is the essence of viciousness (حرامزادگی)."

Argh,

ارگھ अर्घ

The ceremony of making a libation of water between the threshold and the spot where the first bundle of corn is deposited after being brought home from the threshing-ground. This particular ceremony is supposed to be propitious, as it unites the two chief elements of man's sustenance.

Another kind of agricultural Argh consists in placing on the threshold, at seed-time, a cake of cowdung formed into a cup, filling it with corn, and then pouring water upon it. The practice is supposed to propitiate the deities, and secure a good harvest.

The word Argh means in Sanskrit any libation of water to a deity.

Arwan,

ارون अर्वन

The first cuttings of corn, not taken to the threshing-floor, but brought home to be eaten by the family, and presented to the family gods and Brahmans. It is not cut without previously ascertaining the fortunate moment for commencing the harvest. In the Kharíf, Shamakh,—in the Rabi, barley,—is the grain used in the Arwan. When the Arwan is brought home, the grain is taken out of the ear, mixed up with milk and sugar, and every member of the family tastes it seven times. The season is of course one of festivity.

फुला फुला क्यूं फिरे घर अर्वन आया

झुका झुका क्यूं फिरे पिआदा आया

“Why do you go about swelling (with joy)? Because the Arwan has been brought home.

“Why do you go about bent (with grief)? The peon has come (to collect the revenue).”

Arwan is chiefly used in Rohilkhand and the Upper Doáb. The more general and the proper term is नवान्न from नव new, and अन्न corn.—See Dithwan and Júrí.

Asárh,

اساڑہ असारह

The name of the third Hindu Solar month (June-July). The first month of the rainy season, and consequently of cultivation. It is therefore a busy period in the country, and cultivators are on the alert. There is an old proverb—

असारह नांधे हाथी बांधे

सावन नांधे घोरा बांधे

भादों नांधे कुंभि बांधे

That is, “begin in Asárh, and you will become a proprietor of elephants; wait a month till Sáwan, and instead of elephants you will have horses; wait two months till Bhadon, and your family will become slaves.”

In the printed Glossary, Assam (evidently a mistake for Asárh), is called the sixth month, but it can only be considered so according to the European calendar.

The same error occurs under Asin, also called Kúár, and under Augun, usually Aghan.

Asárhí,

اساڑھی असारही

This word does not preserve an identical meaning throughout these provinces. In the North-West it is used only for the Rabí, or spring harvest, and is frequently corrupted into साढ़ी Sádhi. Sáwaní is used in the same parts for the Kharíf, or autumnal harvest. This latter word is not known to the eastward. In Benares, Eastern Oudh, and Saugor, Asarhí signifies the Kharíf, and not the Rabí harvest. The people in the North-West say their meaning is derived from the ploughing in Asarh; those of Benares say theirs is derived from the sowing in Asarh. The latter have the more reason on their side, for the land is ploughed in Asarh for either harvest.—See Asarh.

* * The following extract from a recently-published work, “Handbook of the Economic Products of the Panjáb,” by Baden

H. Powell, Roorkee, 1868, gives so good a general view of agricultural operations in the upper or western portion of the country under notice, that although it is specially written for the Panjáb, I feel no apology is necessary for introducing it here:—

METHOD OF SOWING, WEEDING, AND GENERAL TREATMENT OF CROPS.

The great harvests are called universally Rabí and Kharíf, or by the villagers “Hári” and “Sáwaní,” from the names of the months in which the crops are ripe.

Rabí is the spring harvest; Kharíf the autumn; but it is not all land that bears two harvests. Land that will, is called “dofaslí,” and land that bears only once, “ekfaslí;” but there are certain tracts of country where two or even three harvests will be taken off the soil.

The spring crops are the important ones, for they are sown just at the great rain-fall of the year—the “barsát,” or rainy season—about the month of September, and the crop, which has been sustained during its growth by the winter or latter rains, is cut at the end of the spring of the year following in the month of Baisákh, and the months following. In the bángar lands of the Cis-Satlaj States, Mr. Winyard writes that the rabí crops are not sown where artificial irrigation is not procurable, and that the autumn crops are the staple. The kharíf or autumn crops are sown before the rains, and reaped after their close in October and November.

Mr. Melville, writing from Hushyárpúr, says:—“The rabí crop is reared after great labour; the kharíf with but little trouble; the latter invariably follows the former, and the ploughings of the rabí are almost sufficient for the kharíf also. When the spring crop is cut, the husbandman will wait for a shower in June, plough over his land once or twice, and sow his kharíf crop.”

Fallow lands are never turned up for the first crop at kharíf;

but always begin with a ploughing and sowing for the rabí harvest. The principal crops of the rabí are wheat, barley, gram, "mattar" (Vicia), lentils, tobacco, linseed ("sarshaf" or "sarson," "rai," etc.) The kharíf sowings are "javar," bájrā (millet), maize, rice, "moth," "múng," "másh," and other pulses, sugar-cane, and cotton. These are produced by the efficacy of the rains, which occur when they are in full growth. These crops require much moisture, and most of them, except the pulses, get artificial irrigation beside the rain. The land is subjected to repeated ploughings, the number of them depending on the industry and the means of the farmer; but their number seems much to influence the success of the crop. The fields to be sown with the (zabti) best crops are often ploughed over and over again, ten and twelve times; six times is about the average. The plough seldom goes deeper than six inches, while in England nine inches depth is considered to give the best crops.*

Land intended for sugar-cane receives the greatest number. The land intended for this crop is ploughed up as if the land were to be sown for a rabí crop, and then left till Har, when the planting is effected.

Annexed is a Table showing the number of ploughings given to each kind of crop.

CROP.	No. of Ploughings in rohi land.	Do. dushahi land.	Do. mairā land.	Remarks.
	RABÍ.
Wheat	12	11	10	The number of ploughings will vary much with the skill, industry, and means of the cultivator.
Gújí (wheat and barley together)	7	7	5
Barley	5	5	4
Gram	2	2	2
Poppy	10	9	9
Tobacco	9	9	9
Linseed	12	12	11

* Sealkote Report, p. 116.

CROP.	No. of Ploughings in rohi land.	Do. dushahi land.	Do. maira land.	Remarks.
	KHARÍF.
Makai (maize)	7	6	6	The number of ploughings will vary much with the skill, industry, and means of the cultivator.
Cotton	5	5	5
Mustard.....	7	7	7
Sugar-cane	11 to 27	11	11 to 27
Charí (jowár grown as a fodder)	2	2	2
Dhán (rice)	4
Munji (rice)	5
Moth	1
Múng and Másh	pulses {	...	2

It will be observed how much fewer are the kharíf ploughings than the rabí, with the single exception of sugar-cane land, which, however, is no real exception, for this land, as before remarked, is prepared at the same time as the rabí lands, but left to lie to the kharíf sowing time.

A pair of good bullocks will plough half an acre daily, but weak ones less. Cattle are never kept at work continuously for more than five hours in a day, or two-and-a-half at a sugar-mill. Generally speaking, there is in “bángar” lands about one pair of bullocks to seven or eight acres. “Bár” lands, where the wells are deep, take one pair to five acres, and buffaloes are there much in use on account of their strength. In the well lands it is said that the animals die off quickly because of the constantly rotatory motion which they undergo at the well. “Khádir” land requires less, and weaker animals will do.* In submontane and hill villages a pair can be purchased for Rs. 16, sufficient for ordinary ploughing purposes.

Land after being ploughed is levelled with a “sohága,” called “dáh” in the submontane districts; a flat, straight, heavy piece of wood dragged over the surface of the field by cattle. Sometimes they are made with teeth, and called "much." Some crops are then sown broad-cast, and after the seed is down the land is twice ploughed over, and the field marked out into beds or divisions for irrigation purposes, the divisions being little banks of earth dividing the field into squares. The exact time for sowing is dependent on considerations of weather, rains, etc., and varies for different crops; the people are also superstitious, and often consult Múllahs and Bráhmans, according as they are Hindús or Musulmáns, to ascertain favorable omens and times for sowing. Sowing is generally done broad-cast, but in khádir lowland along the banks of rivers, it is effected by the drill: a hollow piece of bamboo is attached to the plough, through which seed is dropped, and the ploughing and sowing are thus done at one operation; but this practice is not followed in lands irrigated by wells (cháhi). Sowing, when broad-cast, is performed by the farmer with the aid of the "Kamínán,"—the Tirkhán, Lohár, and Chamár, etc., who receive certain dues for their work.

* Major Clarke's “Agriculture of the Rechna Doáb.”

Reaping is done by laborers, who are paid either so much per "kanál" of wheat cut, or else so much per diem.

Manuring is done by Chúras (low caste of sweepers) who receive a small due, and the gleanings of the gathered grain.

Cotton is usually sown broad-cast like wheat. Poppy, tobacco, rice, and some other crops, are sown in nursery beds, called "lab," and when the seedlings appear are planted out. Sugar-cane grows from pieces of the cane containing some joints. They are put into furrows made in the soil.

In sowing, the quantity of seed required to one acre is proximately given in the following Table.

Each kind of crop has generally some peculiarity as to its management, or the method of sowing and rearing it. Such details will be noticed in the catalogue along with the name of the particular product to which they refer.

STATEMENT OF THE AVERAGE QUANTITY OF SEED REQUIRED FOR ONE ACRE OF LAND.

CROP.	Maunds.	Seers.	Chittaks.	Remarks.
Wheat	1	10	...	Sailthi land requires less seed than chahi land.
Goji	1	10	...
Barley	1	10	...
Gram	20	...
Poppy	7
Linseed	14	...
Tára mira	15	...
Moth, múng, and másh	2	8
Munji (rice)	12	...
Chari	20	...
Makai (Indian corn)	9	...
Cotton	8	...
Mustard	3	...
Turnip	2	8

When the crop is sown, the number of waterings that it receives greatly depends on the district, the fall of rain, and other natural and local circumstances.

Hand-hoeing and weeding are often given to crops. The operation is called “godí,” and is effected by a flat kind of shovel or hand-hoe, “rambha,” very like the “khurpá” of Hindústán; but much depends on the class of cultivators, and these operations are little attended to by the lazier castes of agriculturists before-mentioned. In the Cis-Satlaj districts, weeding appears to be much more attended to than in the others. In Thanesar it is stated that sugar-cane is weeded ten times; the poppy seven; tobacco five; cotton four; and maize three. Sugar-cane, cotton, Indian corn and tobacco, and even rice, require manuring.

The following statement, indicating the ploughings, waterings, sowing time and reaping time of the various crops, has been compiled from the valuable tables given by Major Clarke, in his account of the Rechna Doáb Agriculture; the list applies directly to the Gujranwalla district, but gives a good general idea of the practice and results of the various operations of agriculture in other similarly situated districts of the Panjáb proper.

RABÍ.

Kind of Crop.	No. of Ploughings.	No. of Waterings.	No. of Hand-hoeings.	When Sown.	When Reaped.
Wheat	4 to 8	4 to 8	None	Rabí, Kartik, and Maghar	Bysákh
Barley	4 to 8	4 to 8	Ditto	Ditto	Chet
Gojí	4 to 8	4 to 8	Ditto	Ditto	Bysákh
Gram	2	None	Ditto	Bhádón	Bysákh
Flax or linseed.....	2	Sown in Sailábi	Ditto	Assuh	Bysákh
Mustard ...	8	3 or 4	1	Assuh	Chet
China	6 Rabí 4 Kharíf	10 to 16	None	Phágan and Sáwan	Bysákh, Kirtik, or Maghar
Kangní ...	5, 6, or 7	5 or 6	1	Chet, Sáwan, and Bhádón.	Bhádón, Assuh
Tobacco ...	4 or 5	15	3 to 5	Kartik, transplanted in Magh or Phagan	Jeth and Hár
Onion	4 to 8	16	3	Planted out in Magh	Ditto
Carrot	4 to 6	3 or 4	None	Assuh	Chet
Turnip	5	3 to 5	Ditto	20th Bhádón to 10th of Assuh	Maghar to Magh
Methi and sinji	2 or 3	Ditto	Kartik	Phágan and Chet
Poppy	10 to 12	Every 4th or 5th day	10 to 12	Assuh	Chet

It must be borne in mind that the real number of ploughings for some of the above crops is more than appears in the statement, because no account is taken of the primary ploughings on wheat lands afterwards appropriated to the other crops, which land lies fallow till it is determined what shall be sown.

KHARÍF.

Kind of Crop.	No. of Ploughings.	No. of Waterings.	No. of Hand-hoeings.	When Sown.	When Reaped.
Sugar-cane	14 to 15	16 to 25	4 to 6	Phágan	Maghar
Cotton	4 to 6	Uncertain	4	15th Hár to 15th Sáwan	Assuh to end of Maghar
Maize	3 or 4	6 or 7 in chahi lands	2	Hár	Assuh or Kartik
Jawár	3 or 4	3 or 4	For corn, once	Hár	Kartik
Bájra	2	2 or 3	1	Sáwan	Assuh or Kartik
Moth	1	None	None	Sáwan and Bhádon	Maghar
Múng	2	Ditto	Ditto	Hár	Maghar
Til	2	Ditto	Ditto	Sáwan	Maghar
Másh	3	Ditto	Ditto	Sáwan	Kartik and Maghar
Ráwan	3	Ditto	Ditto	Hár and later	Kartik
Rice	Vide details of cultivation in the sequel under "rice."
Sawánk ...	2	3 or 4	None	Hár and later	Bhádon, Assuh, and Kartik
Mustard ...	5 or 6	5 or 6	1 or 2	Bhádon	Kartik

Lands are generally manured at about 250 maunds per acre, or nearly nine tons. Twelve tons is rather a low rate in England.

PRODUCE.

I now come to the last head, namely, the productiveness of the land and the costs and profits of cultivation.

The produce per acre in the various districts may be best gathered from a tabular statement from all districts,—such a one now follows:—It was compiled from returns supplied to the Lahore Museum in 1860. The rates vary much; but we must bear in mind that the estimate is only a proximate one; and that the differences of local situation, the facilities of irrigation, the absence or presence of “kalr” in the soil, the character and caste of the agriculturists, the prosperity of the district generally, the moderation and justness of the Government assessment (amounting on an average to a third or a fourth of the essential produce),* the definition and security of proprietary rights, have all of them great power to modify the agricultural prosperity of a district, and consequently to affect the area of land brought under cultivation, as well as the style of cultivation, and amount of produce.

Division.	District.	Name of Grain, etc.	Produce in grain per acre.	Produce in straw.	Average height of crops.
LAHORE.	Lahore.	The particulars are given in a separate and detailed Table.
	Gujranwalla.	Wheat,	mds.	mds.	ft. in.
			8
			10
			14
	Gujranwalla.	Barley,	7½
			9 to 12
			6
AMRITSAR.	Amritsar.	Wheat, white (on rohi land)	16	12	3 6
		Barley (on doshâhi land).....	12	9½	2 0
		Red Wheat (on rohi land)	16	10	2 6
		Chola (gram) ditto	14	2	1 3
		Saroni ditto	9½	...	3 0

* Or to one-sixth in fairly lightly assessed tracts.

Division.	District.	Name of Grain, etc.	Produce in grain.	Produce in straw.	Average height of crops.
AMRITSAR.	Sealkote.	Vadānak Wheat (1st quality).....	mds. 15	mds. 12	ft. in. 4 6
		Red Wheat, "lāl kanak,"	12	10	4 0
		Barley	0	9	4 0
		White Wheat, from Adālatgarh.....	10 $\frac{1}{2}$
		Ditto, from Syjoké	18
		Rice, from Chukrandās	12
		Ditto, from Sirānwalla	8 $\frac{1}{4}$
		Ditto, from Bakupūr of Pasroor.....	8 $\frac{1}{4}$
	Gurdaspūr.	Mustard Seed	2 $\frac{3}{4}$
		Sugar.....	3 $\frac{1}{2}$
		Rice	10 $\frac{1}{2}$
		Wheat	7
		Linseed	2 $\frac{5}{16}$
		Taramīra	3 $\frac{1}{2}$
RAWALPINDI.	Gujrāt.	Wheat, kanak dāgar (of 1st quality) { Rohi	22	8 $\frac{3}{4}$...
		{ Doshāhi... ..	18 $\frac{3}{4}$	8 $\frac{1}{4}$...
		{ Maira.. ...	15	8	...
		Ditto (of 2nd quality) { Rohi	17 $\frac{1}{2}$	8	...
		{ Doshāhi... ..	16 $\frac{1}{2}$	7 $\frac{3}{4}$...
		{ Maira.....	15	7 $\frac{1}{4}$...
		Red Wheat, "lāl kanak " (of first quality) { Rohi	18	8	...
		{ Doshāhi... ..	16 $\frac{1}{2}$	8	...
		{ Maira.....	15	8 $\frac{1}{4}$...
		Ditto (of 2nd quality) { Rohi	17	8	...
	{ Doshāhi... ..	16	8	...
	{ Maira.....	15	7 $\frac{3}{4}$...
	" Ghoni kanak " (of 1st quality)... { Rohi	13 $\frac{1}{4}$	6	...
	{ Doshāhi... ..	12	6	...
	{ Maira.....	11	6	...
	Ditto (of 2nd quality) { Rohi	12	6	...
	{ Doshāhi... ..	11	6	...
	{ Maira.....	10	5 $\frac{3}{4}$...
	Barley, "jau " (of 2nd quality) ... { Rohi	14	3 $\frac{1}{4}$...
	{ Doshāhi... ..		13	3	...
	Gram	8 $\frac{3}{4}$
	Rice (chāwal)	14
	Maize (makkai)	10 $\frac{1}{2}$
	" Jawār " (Holcus sorghum)	7
	Bajra (Penicillaria spicata)	8 $\frac{3}{4}$
	Dālmūng (Ph. mungo)	7
	Ditto, massūr (lentil)	7
	Dal māsh, or ūrad (Ph. radiatus)	7
	Mót kāla (Ph. aconitifolius)	4
	Mót safaid (Cyamopsis psoraloides).....	4
	Chalodra or mandal (Eleusine coracana)	5 $\frac{1}{4}$
	Kaiyūn (black pulse)	3 $\frac{1}{2}$
	Cheena (Panicum miliaceum)	7
	Dāngri (pulse), (Cajanus)	5 $\frac{1}{4}$
	Karain (pulse), (Cajanus)	5 $\frac{1}{4}$
	Kodra (Paspalum scrobiculatum).....	5 $\frac{1}{4}$

Division.	District.	Name of Grain, etc.	Produce in grain.	Produce in straw.	Average height of crops.
RAWALPINDI.	Shahpúr.	Millet (china)	mds. 12	mds. ...	ft. in. ...
		Ditto (kangni), (P. italicum)	11
		Ditto (sawánk), (Oplismenum frumentaceum) ...	5 or 6
		Ditto (bajra)	8
		Ditto (jawár)	9
		Pulse (másh)	7
		Múng	6
		Massúr	7
		Moth	8
		Lobiya	2
		Gram (chana)	10
PESHAWUR.	Kúhat.*	Wheat (kanak) (of 1st quality)	34	32	5
		Ditto (of 2nd quality)	34	32	5
		Barley (jau)	48	60	3½
	Peshawur.	Barley (jau)	40	5	2½
	Hazara.†	Wheat (kanak)	5-8
		Barley (jau)	6-12
		Rice (cháwul)	8-12
		Oil Seeds—sarshuf	4
DERAJAT.	Dera Gházi Khán.	Wheat (kanak)	10½
		Ditto (makkewalla)	5½
		Ditto (pamban)	7
		Barley (jau)	8¾

* Kúhat—I believe this and the Peshawur rate to be a mistake, unless the maunds are “kucha,” from 13 to 20 seers instead of 40.

† The list given by Major Abbot to the Agri-Horticultural Society of produce in Hazara (where the soil is classed according to the number of harvests it yields), is as follows :—

Name of grain.	Tín-fasli soil.	Do-fasli soil.	Ek-fasli soil.
		mds. srs.	mds. srs.
Maize	12 maunds ..	8 0	6 0
Cotton	2½ maunds ..	3 0	2 0
Rice	” ..	” ..	12 0
Jawár	” ..	4 0	” ..
Kungni	” ..	” ..	2 20
Bajra	” ..	” ..	2 0
Másh	” ..	” ..	1 8
Múng	” ..	” ..	2 0
Moth	” ..	” ..	2 0
Rawan	Sown always with other grain	” ..	2 0
Wheat	4 maunds, 34 seers	3 20	8 32
Barley	9 maunds ..	6 0	4 20

Division.	District.	Name of Grain, etc.	Produce in grain.	Produce in straw.	Average height of crops.
DERAJAT.	Dera Ghází Khán.	Black Barley.....	8 $\frac{3}{4}$
		Rice	12 $\frac{1}{2}$
		Ditto	12 $\frac{1}{2}$
		Bajra	10 $\frac{1}{2}$
		Jawár	10 $\frac{1}{2}$
		Gram.....	8 $\frac{3}{4}$
		Peas	8 $\frac{3}{4}$
		Moth.....	3 $\frac{1}{2}$
		Dal (múng)	5 $\frac{1}{2}$
		Mohrí	8 $\frac{3}{4}$
		Simuka	3 $\frac{1}{2}$
		Sawánk.....	5 $\frac{1}{2}$
		Gram.....	5 $\frac{1}{2}$
MÚLTÁN.	Bunoo.	Kangni	6-10	7-16	3-4
		Barley	8-16	6-14	2-3
		China	9	8	12
	Múltán.	Wheat	9	16	3
		Barley	10	12	2
	Jhang.	Wheat (called rodi kanak)	12-19	10-17	2 $\frac{3}{4}$ -1 $\frac{1}{2}$
		Ditto (inferior land)	9-12	7 $\frac{1}{2}$ -10	2-2 $\frac{1}{4}$
		Wheat (canal land)	13-20	15-21	$\frac{1}{2}$ -3 $\frac{3}{4}$
		Ditto (inferior land)	10-13	8-15	2-2 $\frac{1}{4}$
		Barley (canal land)	12-24	8-16	2 $\frac{1}{2}$ -3
		Ditto (inferior land).....	6-10	4-6	2-2 $\frac{1}{4}$
	Jálandhar.	Wheat, { Cháhi	10
		{ Baráni	4
		Barley, { Cháhi	11
		{ Baráni	4
Gram.....		20
Bajra.....		4
Maize, { Cháhi		16
{ Inferior		8
JÁLANDHAR.	Hushyarpúr.	Charí (jawár)	5
		Mash.....	8
		Wheat of 2nd quality, { Cháhi	8	15	...
		{ Baráni	6 $\frac{1}{2}$	10	...
		{ Best rohi.....	12	22	...
		Ditto of 1st quality, { Cháhi	24	25	...
		{ Baráni	12	20	...
		CHÍSALIAJ STATES.	Amballa.	Wheat (rausli)	18	54	3
				Gram (khádír)	15	30	1 $\frac{1}{2}$
				Linseed (khádír)	3	...	1 $\frac{1}{2}$
Lentils	5			5	1 $\frac{1}{2}$

One or two districts, from the peculiarities of the situation, or means of irrigation, could not conveniently be included in the above table; they are given separately.

Such are the Sirsa and Kangra districts; the former remarkable for the irrigation effected by the overflow of the river Ghagár, the latter by its mountain streams and peculiar rice crops.

PRODUCE OF SIRSA.—I. PRODUCE OF TRACT ON THE BANK OF THE SATLAJ.
Local name of the grain, or quality of the grain.	Whether grown with irrigation or not.	Average height of stem.	Soil in which grown.	Average yield per acre.		Remarks as to outward appearance.
				Grain.	Straw.
Kanak "paman" (wheat of large size, long grain, and translucent appearance).	By irrigation.	Feet. 4½	Rausli and dakur ...	md. sr. 10 0	md. sr. 15 0	{ Long and dark colour beard. No beard at all; consumed chiefly by wealthy people.
Kanak "dáu-d-khání" (wheat of very white colour).	"	3	"	7 20	11 10
Kanak "lál" (wheat of smaller size, and reddish appearance).	"	3	"	9 0	13 20	Short and white beard.
Jau (barley)	By irrigation and rain ...	4	Rausli and bhúr	12 0	12 0	Short beard and ear.

No. 592, dated 18th August, 1864, the following table, showing the produce in canal and rain irrigated villages :—

	Average produce per pukka beegah of canal villages.	Average produce per pukka beegah of barani villages.
Wheat	10 maunds.	7 maunds.
Paddy	12 "	" "
Barley	12 "	5 maunds.
Imphee	6 "	$7\frac{1}{2}$ "
Indian Corn	7 "	8 "
Bajra	6 "	10 "
Kangni	7 "	$2\frac{1}{2}$ "
Gram	12 "	10 "
Máng	8 "	7 "
Urd	8 "	7 "
Moth	" "	11 "
Gawárl	" "	12 "
Mustard or Rape Seed	7 maunds.	4 "
Til	" "	6 "
Goor, (molasses from sugar-cane) ...	18 maunds.	" "

II. PRODUCE OF THE TRACT ON THE BANK OF THE STREAM GHAGÁR.
Local name of the grain, or quality of the grain.	Whether grown with irrigation or not.	Average height of stem.	Soil in which grown.	Average yield per acre.		Remarks as to outward appearance.
				Grain.	Straw.
Kanak "lál" (wheat of small size and reddish colour).	By irrigation	3 Feet.	Rausli and dakur ...	12 0	24 0	Long and white beard.
Jau (barley)	By irrigation and rain ...	3	Rausli, dakur, and bhúr ...	12 0	12 0	Long beard and short ear.
Chola (gram).....	By ditto	1½	Dakur and rausli ...	15 0	30 0
III. BY RAIN.
Jau (barley)	By rain	2½	Rausli.....	4 26	9 12	Long beard and ear.

KANGRA DISTRICT.

Crop.	Produce per acre.	Quantity of seed required for sowing.	Remarks.
Wheat	7½ maunds	26½ seers..	Principally in Kangra valley.
Barley	6½ "	35 "	Grows also higher up on the mountains.
Maize	8½ "	8 "	One return gives about 16 maunds an acre, or 10 maunds a beegah; perhaps this includes the cobs.
Rice	14½ "	44 "	Mr. Barnes mentions that he has counted 1100 seeds on one head of rice. One return gives only 3½ maunds of husked rice, but that was a fine quality.
Amaranth (Chaulai).	4 "
Mandal (Eleusine)...	6 "
Másh	2 "	5½ seers..	Usually sown mixed with kúth .
Gram	9½ "	2 "
Chínán	4 "	Both Kúlú and Kangra.
Ginger	4 "

STATEMENT SHEWING THE QUANTITY OF THE SEVERAL SORTS OF GRAIN PRODUCED AT LAHORE.

Name of Grain.	Time of Sowing.	Number of times of Ploughing.	Quantity of Seed per Acre.	Cost per Acre.	Quantity of Grain produced.	Remarks.
Wheat	October ...	7 or 8 times	1 to 1½ maunds	It does not need hoeing	25 to 30 maunds	Abundantly produced in mahjah and kalr lands (high lands from the river), but very little near the Ravi banks; if sown there, the crop produces more grain.
Barley	October ...	4 or 5 times	35 to 40 seers	Ditto	35 to 40 maunds	Kalr land produces more grain and less straw than the others. Barley is mostly used as a food for horses, and very little by men of the lower classes. It is made into sattn, or flour, made after parching the grain. The crop does not need hoeing. Barley parched is called khat , and with gram, channa-chabina .
Gram	September and Oct.	2 or 3 times	12 to 15 seers	Ditto	20 to 25 maunds	It is eatable when parched, and is used as dāl (split gram); when ground into "besan" it is used for making sweet-meats. In its raw state it is food for horses.
Mustard	October ...	4 or 5 times	10 to 12 chs.	It needs hoeing	3 to 4 maunds	From its seeds oil is extracted, which is used for many purposes; the stalk is useless.
Masūr or lentils	Ditto	2 or 3 times	25 to 28 seers	It does not need hoeing	15 to 20 maunds	It is used as dāl, and is made into bread; the bhūsa answers well for the food of animals, and the grain is given to the bullocks.
Churāl	Ditto	2 or 3 times	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Cooked as dāl, its flour is baked into chapaties, and its stalk for cattle.
Linseed	September and Oct.	5 or 6 times	10 to 28 seers	It needs hoeing twice	Ditto	If it is cultivated for its fibre, it is sown with 28 seers of seed to an acre, otherwise 10 seers is sufficient. If grown for oil its stalk is useless: the land is manured before sowing: the crop is watched.

Name of Grain..	Time of Sowing.	Number of times of Ploughing.	Quantity of Seed per Acre.	Cost, per Acre.	Quantity of Grain produced.	Remarks.
Rice, of all descriptions.	May and June	4 or 5 times	12 to 15 seers	Rs. 3-8	35 to 40 maunds	Kalr land produces very good rice, but not so the mahjah land. It is a very wholesome food; from it are made sweetmeats, the flour is baked into chapaties. The straw is not so useful for fodder as the other straw, therefore its chief use is as a litter: the land in which it grows is manured: the crop is watched when standing green in the field.
Sesamum ...	July	3 or 4 times	10 to 12 chs.	...	2½ to 3 maunds	It yields an oil, and is used in making sweetmeats. Hindús on one of their fasts use it for food.
Jawár (Holcus sorghum)	Ditto	Ditto	20 to 25 seers	No need of hoeing	...	When green answers well as fodder for cattle, and called "charri." The parched grain is eaten by the country people. Its flour is baked into chapaties.
Mash	July and August	2 or 3 times	5 to 8 seers	No need of hoeing	5 to 7 maunds	It is used as dāl, and mixed with rice makes "kichri." In famine its flour is made into chapaties by the country people; also "baris" are made of it by soaking the grain in water for a night; next morning the soft grain is gently rubbed to remove the skin; it is next ground on a flat stone and mixed with spices. This paste is made into balls, which are put for a time in the sun till they dry.
Moth	June and July	2 or 3 times	5 to 7 seers	Ditto	4 to 5 maunds	Dāl and kichri is made of this, and very seldom chapaties of its flour.
Mángi	July	2 or 3 times	3 to 4 srs.	Ditto	7 to 8 mds.	Ditto, ditto, ditto.
Bajra	June or July	3 or 4 times	3 to 4 seers	Ditto	8 to 9 maunds	The people when in need make bread of it, and also kichri: it is food for birds. It is much eaten, however, in the tract of country called Phattowar, between the Jhilm and Indus.

Kangni	Ditto	twice	1½ to 2 srs.	Ditto	10 to 12 ms.	Ditto,	ditto,	ditto.
China	Ditto	twice	2 to 2½ srs.	Ditto	8 to 10 mds.	Ditto,	ditto,	ditto.
Sawánk	Ditto	4 times	2 to 2½ seers	Ditto	8 to 10 maunds	It is made into "khir" (grain and milk boiled together), khushkah, gram boiled in water, kiehri, etc.
Maize	Ditto	6 or 7 times	28 to 30 seers	Ditto	40 maunds	It is made into bread; the boiled grain is used for eating. It is generally parched and sold in bazar by people for eating, called "challi" and "sittia;" also it is used as dalya.
Mandal	July	2 or 3 times	10 to 12 srs.	Ditto	10 to 12 ms.	Useful for making bread, and is a sort of food for animals.
Kodra	Ditto	2 or 3 times	10 to 12 seers	Ditto	10 to 12 maunds	Bread is made of it; also kiehri,—grain and rice boiled in water.
Arve or gú-yái	Feb. and Mareh	8 or 10 times	6 to 7 seers	Rs. 18	100 to 105 maunds	The root is used by natives and Europeans as an article of food. It is procurable in every season of the year.
Potato	October	15 times	6 to 7 seers	Rs. 25	140 maunds	Ditto,	ditto,	ditto.
Sugar-cane...	Feb. and Mareh	15 or 16 times	Rs. 19	Rs. 20	150 maunds	It is much esteemed by all classes, who chew it as a sweet-meat; the process of sugar-making is described later in the book.
Musk-melon, water-melon, etc.	Ditto	12 or 14 times.	Rs. 3 to 4	Rs. 15 or 16	Rs. 37 to 63	Esteemed as a fruit.
Cotton	April & May	5 or 6 times	9 to 10 srs.	Rs. 12	5 to 6 mds.	A fibre.
Red pepper...	Ditto	5 or 6 times	Rs. 2½	Rs. 12	Rs. 20	When dry, the produce is about five maunds per acre.

It is now time to close this somewhat protracted agricultural sketch, with some tables illustrating the costs of cultivation and the profits of agriculture. I need hardly remind the reader that the Government assessment on lands is intended to be at the rate of about a fourth, and should not be more than one-sixth of the gross produce, ascertained at the time of settlement by careful enquiry, both as to existing assets and future capabilities. There can be little doubt that the majority of settlements are now on equitable terms, although it must be admitted that there is much inequality on the pressure of the assessments. The revision of settlement, at present in progress in many districts, cannot fail to remedy this defect to a great extent; and the security of a just and moderate assessment for a long period cannot fail to encourage agriculturists.* It has been said that, in some of the fertile districts of the Panjáb, a portion of the kharíf harvest alone is sufficient to pay the Government share, leaving almost the entire rabí as clear profit to the farmer, that is as his own assets, from which he pays his costs and expenses, and draws his profit. There can be little doubt that this is the case, and in a state of profound peace, when the agriculturist knows that the sum once assessed cannot be augmented during the continuance of the term specified in his settlement contract, he has every inducement to enlarge his efforts, and thus surely increase his profits. It only remains for us to overcome the great drawbacks to improvement that exist in the slothfulness of the people, and where they are not slothful (as many agricultural tribes are not), to overcome that aversion to change which leads them to be perfectly satisfied to plod on at the same rate now as they did 2000 years ago.

* The question of a permanent settlement is also under discussion; the subject is one of the greatest importance, but cannot be entered on here, because if any remarks were offered either on one side or the other, it would be impossible to avoid going into the whole subject.

Suggestions on these points will be found on the report of the jury on this class. I will only add here that one of the most powerful checks on cultivation that is in existence consists in the taxation of capital in assessing lands. It requires the nicest discrimination on the part of the assessing officer, and ought to receive his earnest attention, to see that capital is not taxed, otherwise the people will cease bringing land under cultivation, and cease sinking wells from the mere dread of an enhanced rental, which, if carelessly assessed according to mere apparent assets, will surely result in the crushing of agricultural enterprise.

I now give some lists showing the costs of cultivation in different parts. The first is a transcript of Major Clarke's estimate, which gives the costs and profits on 34 acres of land attached to a first-rate well, in the parganah of Shekopúra in the Rechna Doáb, which will give a fair representation of the majority of good lands in the Panjáb (excluding of course bar lands, and sandy, "tibba," tracts,) where the produce is assumed to be first-rate in quantity.

The 34 acres sown for the year are supposed to be sown thus: 12 acres for kharíf, 22 for rabí :—

12 ACRES FOR KHARÍF.	{	2 ghumaos of land for sugar-cane, or nearly 2 acres.
		2 acres of cotton.
		1 acre of rice.
		1 acre of sarson (rape or mustard seed).
		4 acres of jawár (Holcus sorghum).
		2 acres of maize.

22 ACRES FOR RABÍ.	{	18 acres of wheat.
		2 acres of barley.
		2 acres of gújí (wheat and barley mixed).

Then the cost and profit will be as follows :—

KHARÍF.

Quantity of land under crop.	Crop.	Produce in kind.	Produce in money.	Expenses, including revenue, and all cesses at $\frac{1}{4}$ th of produce.	Expenses of ditto at $\frac{1}{4}$ rd of produce.	Profit to cultivator or farmer paying $\frac{1}{4}$ th of produce.	Ditto paying of $\frac{1}{4}$ rd of produce.
			RS. A. P.	RS. A. P.	RS. A. P.	RS. A. P.	RS. A. P.
2 Acres.	Sugar-cane	80 mds.(goor)	200 0 0	149 9 0	163 3 6	50 7 0	36 12 0
2 „	Cotton	24 „	48 0 0	34 9 6	39 2 6	13 6 6	8 13 6
2 „	Maize	40 „	26 10 0	17 11 9	20 6 9	8 14 3	6 3 6
1 „	Rice	24 „	24 0 0	13 9 9	15 14 6	10 6 3	8 1 6
1 „	Mustard ...	8 „	8 0 0	4 8 0	5 3 9	3 8 0	2 12 3
4 „	Jawár.....	32 „	21 5 0	22 3 0	Is used as fodder, and the cost becomes almost nothing.
12 „	327 15 0	242 3 0	243 14 9	86 10 0	62 10 9

RABÍ.

18 Acres.	Wheat	304 mds.....	304 0 0	198 0 9	226 14 6	105 15 3	77 1 6
2 „	Barley	32 „	21 5 3	11 14 6	14 1 3	9 6 9	7 4 0
2 „	Gújí	32 „	25 10 0	14 8 0	16 14 6	11 2 0	8 11 6
22 Total.	350 15 3	224 7 3	257 14 3	126 8 0	93 1 0
Grand Total			678 14 3	466 10 3	501 13 0	213 2 0	155 11 9

I have added one more table of the costs and profits of land, extracted from that very able and interesting volume, the Report on the Revised Settlement of the Sealkot District in 1865, by Mr. E. A. Prinsep. These tables are interesting from their great accuracy, as well as from their showing the state of things in a richly cultivated district like Sealkot. From the appendix to these tables a very good idea will be obtained of the proportion in which the Government revenue tax falls on the produce, and how equitable rates can be ascertained: the tables as here given are somewhat reduced in form from the originals, which, together with the illustrative matter of para. 241, et seq., should be studied in the original report; the whole work will repay perusal.

The land taken as a standard is 30 ghumaos, attached to one first-class well in the Charkari Mahál, or well-abounding tract of the district.

The total expenditure for a year from pucka well, irrigating 30 ghumaos, in the Charkari Mahál of Sealkot is:—

		R.	A.	P.
Wages of labour.	Ploughman, @ 2 maunds kucha per mensem and
	1 rupee cash	22	0	0
	Coolie, per annum	4	0	0
	Cowherd	26	0	0
		52	0	0
Farm service.	Potter, @ 1 mání per harvest	10	0	0
	Carpenter, @ $\frac{1}{2}$ mání	5	0	0
	Carpenter, @ $\frac{1}{2}$ mání	5	0	0
		20	0	0
Cost of fodder and keep of stock.	5 yoke of oxen's feed, besides grass and clover, @ $\frac{1}{2}$ a mání per head per annum, or cash charge for salt, Rs. 2	27	0	0
Repair of ploughs and tools.	5 Ploughs @ Rs. 0-8 per plough per annum	2	8	0
	Iron for trowels (rambha), seythes (dátrí), etc.....	1	0	0
	Ditto for spades	1	0	0
	Well-rope required every two months, @ Rs. 1 per
	"mál"	3	0	0
		7	8	0
Value or cost of seed.	1 Ghumao sugar-cane, @ 1 pai per 4 marlahs	2	0	0
	2 Ditto cotton, @ 16 ditto	0	4	0
	4 Ditto maize, @ 1 topa per kanal	2	0	0
	4 Ditto, "charri," @ 3 ditto	2	8	0
	Total (Autumn Crop), 12 ghumaos	8	12	0

Space forbids me to extract from the Sealkot Report the remaining table, which fills up the page in the original, and which shows how an equitable revenue rate per well can be deduced from the above data. To summarize the results in the form of a per centage, it will be found that calculating the gross proceeds of 30 acres, at a money value of Rs. 360, this gives Rs. 12 an acre; and the following scheme will show the costs and profits according as the Government revenue is assessed at Rs. 2-8 or at 2 per acre.

At Rs. 2-8.				At Rs. 2-0.
	RS.	A.	P.	RS.	A.	P.
Expenses ..	130	8	0	130	8	0
Subsistence ..	100	0	0	100	0	0
Interest, etc.	17	10	0	15	8	0
Revenue and cesses ..	85	8	0	68	6	0
Profits ..	26	6	0	45	10	0
Profit at 7 per cent.				Profit at 13 per cent.

Where the Government revenue demand is at the rate of Rs. 2-8 per ghumao, the farm expenses and subsistence of two families are 64 per cent.; interest on revenue and cash payments of farm, 5 per cent.; Government revenue, 23·5 per cent.; leaving nett profit, 7·4 per cent: or if the Government rate be Rs. 2 per ghumao, then these figures will become 64 per cent., 4·2 per cent., 18·6 per cent.; and profits, 13·0, respectively.

Under the various headings of the collection will be found an occasional list of costs in detail of the cultivation of the various crops.

When the owner does not cultivate, but receives his malikana, the profit to him is nearly the same.

The last point I shall notice is the native classification of diseases and blights incident to crops, and again quote Major Clarke* and Mr. E. A. Prinsep.

* Agriculture of the Réchna Doab.

Corn is lodged (hawá-zad) by strong wind, and is injured by want of rain, by frost, hail, rats, jackals. The following are the names of insects, animals, and diseases which injure crops:—

Sugar-cane.—Tela, huda, kírí, soka, pála, nisarna, músh, kuchra, and kangíarí.

Cotton.—Phirtí, tela, soka, pála (frost) and rats.

Makai.—Kírí, toka, siyank, tupkí.

Charí.—Kírí, toka, and tela.

Rice.—Jholur and rats.

Moth, mung, and mash.—Tela, toka, and bhutoth, or poachur.

Wheat, barley, and gújí.—Kúngí, lakha, jholur, patáka, toka, kangíarí, and trel.

A few of the above may be specifically mentioned.

Kúngí.—A red rust. The “kúngí,” as far as I can discover, is a blight that comes upon young wheat (which is sown late) in the months of January and February, after much rain. If there has been several days of rain, and followed by a cessation for three or four days, and during this time the sun does not appear, but heavy lowering clouds hanging about, bringing sultry weather, then this red “rust” appears on the ears of wheat. The damp is said to bring it on, but it goes away if the sun shines after rain, or the cold wind ceases. It attacks wheat and nothing else, barley is quite free from it, because it is believed that barley is not a grain that is heating. Gram and masúr, which are sown at the same time as wheat, are free from it. This “kúngí” is the chief disease wheat is liable to. It appears always first at the junction of the large leaf, with the blade, and thus spreads to the young ear; if it should disappear in three days, then there is hope for the crop. If it lasts and spreads beyond that time, then the crop is ruined,—generally it reduces the yield by about one-third; sometimes by half; the disease lasts altogether about ten days, and when in its height so extensive is the “red rust” that is accumulated, that, if a man walks through the field, his feet and legs will be quite covered over with a coating of red.

If the clouds break, after rain has ceased, and the sun comes out, then the blight is driven away. If a breeze blows from east at the time, it is intensified, but if the wind shifts round to west, it is blown off on the ground. The chief cause is assigned to the pressure of lowering clouds. If they are disturbed by the sun breaking out, or by a breeze removing the sultriness in the air, then there is hope of the blight disappearing in such cases; all that will remain will be mere discoloration. If, however, the sultry state of the atmosphere continue for three or four days continuously, then the disease is looked upon as certain to affect the whole crop. If timely rain, or west wind intervenes, within the first three days of its first appearance, then it is washed or blown off, and no real harm is done, for the disease has had time only to get on the leaf, and not to spread to the ear of wheat in the leaf. The wheat leaf will gather its strength and greenness as it grows, and all trace of the discoloration, even, will in such cases disappear.

The actual loss sustained by the crop is not known till the wheat ripens. The ear is found to have no grains, and where most of the blades turn out grainless, they turn yellow, and show what loss has been done about one month and a half after, i.e., in the first fifteen days of April.

Tela.—Is a dark-coloured powder, saltish to the taste, which lies between the outer and inner coating of sugar-cane and stops its growth; the only remedy for it is to wash it off with water. In wheat it causes the plant to turn black. (The “smut” on wheat, etc. is called kali atta; it is a fungoid growth).

Huda.—The drying up of leaves, and their becoming yellow in Sâwun and Bhadoñ, without any apparent cause.

Nisarna.—This is not a disease, but it is esteemed very bad for sugar-cane to blossom (nisarna), and such canes as blossom, being evil-omened, are taken up and given to whomsoever will have them.

Pâla.—Frost, when the north wind blows piercingly, and the cold discolour the cane, the taste of which becomes saltish, and the produce is inferior; the cane has also a disagreeable smell, and the top dries up.

Kuchra.—In Jeth and Har, when the young cane is about 20 inches high, this insect eats the heart, and does very great injury to the crop, destroying as much as half, perhaps.

Kangiári.—These are barren branches, growing out of the cane, which do not give juice, neither will cattle eat them; if kangíarí prevail much in a crop, it injures it to the extent of one-twentieth.

Kírí.—An insect so called, which eats the germ of young plants, particularly sugar-cane. In Jeth and Baisákh, sometimes the crop is destroyed by it; rain or water is the best remedy; sometimes the “madár” plant (Calotropis Hamiltonii) is cut, and laid in the water which is to irrigate the field; the bitterness thus given destroys the kírí.

Soka.—Is occasioned by want of water, the cane dries inside, becomes hollow, and throws out great quantities of “choee,” or outer leaf.

Phirtí.—In Jeth and Har, young cotton plants, in maira soil, are liable to be injured by sand storms, which wound them and they dry up. The remedy for this is to water the crop, by which means the sand holds together. Phirtí also injures sugar-cane.

Toka.—Is a moth, which injures young shoots by nipping them off, as if with a pair of scissors.

Dhímak or white ants.—If rains do not fall in Sáwun and Bhadon white ants do great damage; rain kills them.

Trel or dew.—If heavy dews fall in Assuh and Kartak, the jowar crop is much injured, the grain cracks and becomes dark, and almost friable.

Bhutoth.—This disease arises from the east wind blowing, which causes moth, mash and múng to shrivel up, and the pods do not fill.

Lishk or Lightning.—Should it lighten much when gram is about to form its flowers, it injures them, and the pods do not fill well, and an insect is also produced thereby.

Tupkí.—When the rains are very heavy, the stalks of Indian corn shoot up, and spindle, and yield no grain.

Another drawback to good crops, particularly in districts below the hills, such as Gujrát, Sealkot, and Gurdáspur, is the frequency of hail-storms, which are prevalent in the months Phaggan and Chet, sometimes they come in October. At the former season they always cause much injury to wheat when it begins to ripen. In Tila in the Jhilam district, the “jogis” are propitiated by presents, to come and forewarn the people of storms. They plunge into a field with a drawn sword, or a knife is stuck into a mound with offerings placed round it; goats are often sacrificed, and people are stupid enough to pay for this deception. Lightning does damage to such crops as gram, masúr, flax, and tíl, which are called “phoilsah,” or lishk-már, lightning-struck, in consequence. The flowers fall off and the seed is lost.

Crops are preserved from birds by scare-crows, or “daránas.” A blackened earthenpot stuck on a stick being a favourite method. In the case of tall crops, such as sugar-cane, etc., light platforms, called “manas,” are erected, on which a person is stationed day and night to frighten birds, by shouting and discharging clay pellets, etc., etc.

Notwithstanding that the Panjáb is a great grain-producing country, some grain is imported from Malwa and the fertile districts, in its neighbourhood, the mart for whose produce is the city of Jhánsi, whence the grain is exported northwards. The internal traffic in grain is considerable, from the fertile districts. Large quantities of grain comes down the Satlaj to Fírozpúr. Rice is largely exported from Kangra to other districts. Hushyarpúr and the Jálandhar districts supply much grain also to other districts. Sugar is exported largely from parts of the Panjáb, both in a finished state and as “goor,” or molasses. Latterly there has arisen a large export trade of wheat and sugar, cotton and oil seeds, towards England, viâ Múltán and Bombay.

Ast,

است अस्त

A Sanskrit word signifying the setting of the sun. Astáchal अस्ताचल is the name of the Western mountain, behind which the sun is said to set. Uday उदय is the word used in opposition to Ast, to signify the rising of the sun. It is the name also of the mountain over which it rises. As Ugmana is used with Athmana,* q.v. so is Uday used with Ast. Thus, it is a common benediction in the North-West to say to an English

* I have put this word in Part IV., because of a note attached to it containing a long string of miscellaneous words, which do not come under this head.—B.

functionary, اُدي است تڪ تمھارا راج هو “May your dominion extend from East to West.

Bíjkhád, بیج کھاد बीजखाद

A term used in Rohilkhand to signify advance of seed and food to agriculturalists: Takḱávi being understood to apply solely to advances for cattle, and for sinking wells.

The word is derived from بیج seed, and کھاد manure.

Bísar, بیسر बीसर

Gleanings left in the field for the lower orders.—E. Oudh.

Silá or Salla are the words used in the Doáb, Rohilkhand, Dehli, Bundelkhand, and Benares.

Bíjwár, بیجوار बीजवार

Perquisite of the lower classes, consisting of a portion of seed-corn, which is brought away each day from the field.—Rohilkhand.

It is called Bijái in Dehli. Both words are derived from بیج seed.

Bengat, بینگت बेंगत

Seed.—Seed given to an indigent ryot for sowing, who is to repay the same at the time of harvest, with such additional quantity as may be agreed upon.—Benares. See Bísar.

Berí, بیڑی बेड़ी

Fetters.—Irons fastened to the legs of either men or animals; also the basket used for raising water for the purpose of irrigation. It is generally made of bamboo in the East, and of leather in the West. It is suspended from four ropes, and swung by two men. The word is used in the Doáb and Rohilkhand, as are also Lihṛí, Chhapa, and Boka. In Benares the word Daurí is used, and sometimes Boka. In Dehli Dal, and in Bundelkhand, Dalea and Dúgla.—See these articles.*

A drawing of the berí will be found in the plate at the commencement of Part IV.

Bháolí, بیاولی भावली

Distribution of the produce of a harvest between Zamíndár and cultivator. Rent paid in kind instead of money.—See Glossary under Behavilly and Bhaweley.†

Bhogbandak, بیوگبندهک भोगबंधक

Mortgage.—A debt in which lands, trees, or animals, are pledged to the lender; the produce in corn, fruits, milk, labour, etc., being considered an equivalent for interest.

“The rent, or use, or occupation of a pledged house, or the produce of a pledged field, is called bhoga labdha, interest by enjoyment.”—“Vrihaspati, Digest,” B. I., c. i. s. 35.

The word is derived from भोग enjoyment, and बंधक pledge.

Patbandhak is a pledge, the usufruct of which pays principal and interest within a certain period, and therefore ensures its own redemption. A debt is thus said pat jana, from the Sanskrit Root pat, to fall.

Dishtbandhak, q. v. is equivalent to hypothecation. These expressions, though in general acceptance as law-terms, are not much used in the transactions of the common people, except in the Lower Doáb and Benares.

Bhúíndagdhá, بیوئین دگدھا भूईंदग्धा

Gifts at marriages and funerals. The word is derived from

* Káli Rái spells these words लिहडी, बेडी and डाल.—E. add. This Káli Rái appears to have been a Tahsildar, or, perhaps, a native settlement officer. He is often quoted in E. add.—B.

† This kind of tenure is very common in Southern Behar, and is similar to Batai, q. v.—B.

the ceremony of burning earth, which is performed previous to their presentation : from भूई earth, and दग्धना to burn.—E. Oudh.*

Bhúinbhái or Bhúnbhái, بيوننبائي or بيوننبائي
भूईभाई or भूंभाई

A term used in the Dehli Territory to signify a man invited by a proprietor to reside in a village, and invested by him with a portion of land, which he is not at liberty to dispose of to others. From भूई or भूं earth, and भाई brother.

Bhúndarí,† بيونڈري भूंडरी

A small patch of cultivation. Lands let without rent by Zamíndárs, either to village servants, such as barbers, bearers, watchmen, and the like ; or to indigent relations, fakírs, and friends who come to sojourn in a village for a season.

Baunda is the term used generally in Rohilkhand and the Doáb ; but it is variously pronounced Bhaundarí, Bhúnda, Bhundarí, and perhaps most correctly Bohndarí.

Bhadáhar, بيداهر भदाहर

The cutting of grain when it is only half ripe. It is a common saying—

चना भदाहर और जौ कुरा
काठो गेहूं ढेंका ढारा

“Cut your gram half ripe, your barley ripe, your wheat when the ear bends down.”

The word is confined to Rohilkhand. Bhadbhadána and Hureha are used in a similar sense in the Doáb ; and Dhesar

* Buchanan II. 496.—E. add. He probably refers to Montgomery Martin's Edition of the Buchanan Papers, called “Eastern India.”—B.

† I think this should be spelt भूईधरी from धरना to hold.—B.

and Gadra in other places. These last terms are applied generally to any half-ripe fruit.

Bhaṇṭá, بیٹا भंटा

Ploughman's wages in kind.—Rohilkhand.

Bhaṭṭa is used in this sense in Dehli and the Doáb.

Bharpái, भरपाई भरपाई

A release in full in Ságara and Benares; the corresponding word is Bharautí भरौती.

It is derived from two words which are entered in the receipt, as in the endorsement, मैं ने कौड़ी कौड़ी भर पाई "I have received every Kaurí in full."

The equivalent term in Persian is رسید rasíd, a receipt, from رسیدن rasídan, to arrive.

Bhaṭṭá, بیٹا भट्टा

Ploughman's wages in kind.—See Bhaṇṭa.

Bijhgháh, بجھگاہ बिज्जगाह

A scare-crow. The word is in general use, and is derived from बिज्जकाना Bijhkaná, to frighten. Daráwá دراوا is more frequently used in Dehli, and Dhái دهائی if it is moved by a string, as when a bambú or a stick is pulled against a bough of a tree, to produce a noise and frighten away the birds. Other words in common use are Dhokhá دھوکھا, Dharakká دھرکا, Dharallá دھرلا and Dhúhá دھوھا q. v.

Binahar, بنہر बिनहर

A gatherer of cotton; from Binná بنا to pick.—Benares.

The corresponding word in the Doáb and Rohilkhand is Paikar; in Bundelkhand, Paihara; and in Dehli, Púí. He generally receives one-tenth of the gross produce, as well as a share, sometimes amounting to a fourth, of the cleaned cotton.

Bisár,

بِسَار विसार

Loan of seed, upon stipulation of ample refund after harvest.—E.

* * In some parts of Gorakhpúr and Champáran, and for aught I know to the contrary, in other parts of the country as well, a simple and ingenious system called the देवढिया deorhiyá, or “one-and-a-half,” is followed. At sowing time the cultivator borrows, say one maund of seed, value two rupees, and engages to repay it at harvest with interest at fifty per cent., or in simpler words to repay one-and-a-half for every one he receives, whence the system takes its name. He generally applies, not to grain dealers or banias, but to one of the wealthier peasants, or to his zamíndár, many of whom have large accumulations of grain stored up on purpose to trade with. The zamíndár, nothing loth, advances the necessary grain, and when the harvest comes round demands instant repayment. The ryot tenders him a maund and a-half of grain; but the price of grain has fallen, as it always does at harvest-time, to, say, one rupee a maund, a maund and a-half would only be worth at that time 1 rupee 8 anas, which would not repay the lender, who therefore refuses to take it, and demands three rupees, two as the cost of the seed and one as interest, and he insists on immediate payment of either three rupees in cash, or the equivalent in grain at the market rate of the day, in other words three maunds. The ryot of course has no cash, and therefore pays in kind three maunds of grain, as an equivalent for three rupees. This grain the lender keeps for months, till the price of grain rises to two or two and a-half rupees a maund, when he sells, and by this process pockets seven and a-half rupees in return for his outlay of one maund! But this iniquitous system is sometimes pursued a step further. Suppose that the harvest is a bad one, as often happens. The ryot comes to the lender and says, “I cannot pay you till next harvest.” “Very good,” says the lender, “I shall charge you deoṛhiyá on the whole amount, principal and interest," compound interest in fact. The account then stands over till next harvest when it assumes this shape—

Lent originally one maund of grain, value ...	2 rupees.
Interest at 50 per cent.	1
	<hr/>
	3

Market rate of grain at harvest time, 1 rupee = 1 maund.

Therefore due 3 maunds.

Market rate of grain at sowing time (after a bad harvest), 3 rupees.

Therefore 3 maunds = 9 rupees.

Interest at 50 per cent. = $4\frac{1}{2}$

Total.....	<hr/> 13 $\frac{1}{2}$
------------	------------------------

Market rate of grain at harvest time, 1 rupee = 1 maund.

Therefore due 13 $\frac{1}{2}$ maunds which will be sold three months later at $2\frac{1}{2}$ rupees a maund = 33 rupees 8 anas. And all this for one maund originally lent ! The trick consists in shifting the terms of the account from kind to cash and back again as often as the state of the market requires it. I have given above a very simple and moderate example, but by raising the interest, as is sometimes done at each renewal of the loan, it may be imagined what immense profit to the lender, and what hopeless ruin to the borrower, results. I have heard of cases where grain was lent at siwáiyá, or 25 per cent. the first harvest, at deoṛhiyá, or 50 per cent. the second, at tñpáwiýá, or 75 per cent., the third, and so on ; so that out of an original amount of one maund lent, a debt of 100 maunds had (owing to bad harvests, and various additional extortions) arisen in two years ! The lenders are generally Zamíndárs, and there is a class of Rajputs converted to Islam, and called ठकुराई Thakuráis, who have earned a specially bad name by this practice. During the famine of 1867, the houses of these men were naturally frequently pillaged. In some cases bands of starving ryots, headed by their paṭwárí, surrounded the bursting granaries of these men, and helped themselves to the contents, the paṭwárí writing down each person's name, and the amount taken by him, and handing the list to the owner, when they all departed quietly and orderly to their homes, after promising to repay when times improved. Perhaps the most serious, though not the most striking results of famines in India, are the long train of indebtedness which they leave behind, entanglements such as it takes the ryot years, and sometimes generations, to wipe off. The native Zamíndárs seem to have no pity on such occasions, and it is impossible to interfere without making matters worse. The detestable system I have described above was never in fuller force than during the dreadful summer of 1867, when the agricultural population was decimated by famine.—B.

Bohní,

بوهني बोहनी

The first money received during the day by shopkeepers and hucksters. No credit is allowed, nothing but ready money being received on such occasions. The practice is universal in India, and is precisely like the Handsel of England.

Bau,

बो बौ

Is the name of the fee or perquisite of the Zamíndár, whenever the daughter of any cultivator in his village is married. The word is probably a corruption of Bahú बहू, a bride.

Múrásá and Mandwach are also used in this sense.

Badní,

बदनी बदनी

A contract by which the borrower gives a bond at high interest, and in satisfaction of which he assigns his crops valued far below the market price. It is called Buddunní in the Glossary. The word is derived from بدنا to wager, to agree.

Bahoro, بہورو बहोरो

The name given to the sloping pathway for bullocks drawing a well; especially that by which the bullocks return towards the well. The more general word is Pairí.

Bahoro is chiefly used in the Central Doáb; but the origin of the word can be traced, where Bahoro is unknown, in the verb بہورنا bahúrná, to return, to come back. Thus, a man standing at the well-head, amongst other ditties which he chants, as well to soothe his toil as mark the time, will frequently say—

बझरके ले आव भाई मेरा राम*

That is “bring back the bullocks,” as the water bag is raised. Hence Bahoro comes to signify the road by which the bullocks are brought back. We trace it again in the common Hindi word بہرون “again.”

Banotsarg, بنوتسرگ बनोत्सर्ग

Is the name given to the marriage ceremony performed in honour of a newly-planted orchard, without which preliminary observance it is not proper to partake of its fruit.

A man holding the Salagram personates the bridegroom, and another holding the sacred Tulsí (Ocymum sanctum) personates the bride. After burning a hom, or sacrificial fire, the officiating Brahman puts the usual questions to the couple about to be united. The bride then perambulates a small spot marked out in the centre of the orchard. Proceeding from the south towards the west, she makes the circuit three times, followed at a short distance by the bridegroom, holding in his hand a strip of her chádar or garment. After this the bridegroom takes precedence, making his three circuits, and followed in like manner by his bride. The ceremony concludes with the usual offerings.

* Ram is a mode of salutation and friendly address almost always used during well irrigation. Hence the common proverb—

गाडी की मसकरी कुआ राम राम

In which a driver's rudeness and incivility are contrasted with the courtesy of the well-man.

The word is derived from the Sanskrit वन a forest, a grove, and उत्सर्ग abandoning, resigning, a donation, a presentation of anything promised to a god or Brahman with suitable ceremonies. (Wilson's Sanskrit Dictionary, p. 144.) Thus also वृषोत्सर्ग is applied to the ceremony of marriage performed in the name of the bullock which is abandoned to the wide world on the eleventh day of mourning for a near relative, and which infests our streets and high roads under the name of Bijar, Sámr, and Brahmaní Bull.—See Jalotsarg.

Barábháo,

بڑا بھاء बडाभाव

A kind of appraisement. Literally, a high price, from बड़ा large, and भाव rate. The term is used in distinction to the Akhtíj ka bhao, in which, when money is borrowed by a cultivator, he agrees to re-pay it in corn, with the úp or interest, at the price prevailing on the day of Akhtíj. (See Akhtíj.) The grain merchant can scarcely ever lose under this engagement, as in consequence of the season of the year, the average necessarily ranges high.

In borrowing money on Barábháo, the cultivator agrees to re-pay it with interest at the highest rate of the whole season. Suppose a man, at the beginning of the season, when wheat is selling at 20 seers per rupee, borrows 10 rupees on Barábháo, at the rate of 5 seers úp; and supposing corn subsequently at any time during the season to range up to 25 seers, he will have to pay $1\frac{1}{4}$ maund as interest, added to $6\frac{1}{4}$ maunds principal, in all $7\frac{1}{2}$ maunds, having borrowed only a few months previously what was equal to 5 maunds.

* * It will be seen that this system, where the grain merchant is the lender, though somewhat exorbitant, coming to as much as 50 per cent., is still tolerably fair when contrasted with that pursued by the petty zamíndárs of Champáran, described under Bisár, q.v.—B.

Barháwan,

برہاوان

बढ़ावन

A round cake of cowdung placed on the top of a heap of corn, to prevent the effects of an evil eye, and for good luck's sake, in order that the corn may increase. There is a well-known satirical couplet in ridicule of the practice.

जग वीराहा त्रिष्णा बिबस भूत पूज भावलेवे

बढे र बढे बढ़ावना जन किसान रचदेवे

“The world is mad, and for the sake of avarice will worship devils, and will still put on the Barháwan, whether increase result from it or not.”

The word is used chiefly to the East of Allahabad. To the Westward Chank and Chhattúr, q.v. are applied in the same sense.

Barrá,

بَرّا

बरी

A rope; especially that which is pulled on the fourteenth of the light half of the month Kuár, which day is known as the Bantá Chaudas, बांटा चौदस. The rope, which is made of the grass called Makra, is thicker than a man's arm! and that village party in whose quarter the rope is broken, or by whom the rope is pulled out of the hands of their antagonists, remain the champions during the ensuing year, and retain possession of the rope. If, during the next year, no other party succeed in breaking the new rope, that also remains as their spoil, and so continues till more successful competitors are found. The practice is observed chiefly in the East of these Provinces, being unknown, even by name, in the West.

Barsodiyá, برسوڊيا बरसोदिया

Barsáliyá, برساليا बरसालिया

A servant engaged in cultivation, who contracts for one year's service; from बरस a year.

Bayá, بيا बया

A person appointed in bazars to measure grain. The word is principally used in the Lower Doáb and Bundelkhand; in other parts the word kayál is more usual.

Bayái, بيائي बयाई

Weighman's perquisite; from the preceding word.

Chánk, چانک चांक

Chánk, or Chanka, is a stamp fixed on a stack or heap of grain, called also chhapa, from छापना chhápna, to print.

The Chánk is cut on wood, and is impressed on a cake of moist earth, called the Barkat kí mittí. The legend engraved upon it generally consists of such words as عاقبت بخير باد "may the result be happy," or ايمان كي سلامت "the safety of good faith," to imply that the honour of the parties to whose care the corn is entrusted is appealed to against any dishonest alienation of it. The seal is then placed on the sides of the heap, never as in the Chhattúr, q.v., on the top, lest the increase of corn may be thereby prevented. The Chánk is only impressed where Batái tenures prevail, and only on heaps which are to be divided, or, having been divided, are left under charge of only one of the parties.

Another meaning of Chánk is given under the articles Chhattur and Barháwan, q.v.

Chánk is also the name of the ceremony which is observed in the threshing-ground at the time of forming the winnowed corn into a heap.

After the foundation has been laid as described in the article Angaunga, or according to any other mode in local use, and after the heap has been raised about a foot, a man, standing with his face to the North, takes the winnowing basket in his right hand, his left hand being full of grain, and commencing from the South goes round from West to East, and again to the South, pressing the basket against the bottom of the heap. When the heap is raised to about three feet, each hand changes its occupation, his left hand holds the basket, and his right the grain, and he circumambulates the heap the contrary way, from East to West, pressing the basket against it. When the heap is raised about five feet, he changes hands again, and goes through the same form as he did on the first occasion, pressing the basket against the top of the heap. It is seldom that more than three circuits are made, but if the heap is very high, as many as five, or even six are made.

Sometimes the Chánk is not performed till the entire heap is made, when it is perambulated three times successively in the order above-mentioned.

When the performer again reaches the South at the conclusion of his last circuit, he places the basket before him on the ground, and joining the palms of his hands together, makes a low bow to the corn, exclaiming :

स्वावढ परमेश्वर जी

सै वर्कत दीजिये

“Lord God of the corn-heap, Give a hundred blessings.”

or,

अन्न देवता जी

सहेस गुना हजिये

“Corn, God and Lord, Mayest thou multiply a thousand-fold.”

or,

सहदेवन गोशार्दन हम को तुम राज व्योहर उर्गिन करो

“God give us prosperity in our affairs.”

or some other ejaculation, by which he hopes to obtain a blessing on his corn.

This is the mode as it is practised in the Upper Doáb and Dehli. In Rohilkhand it is different. In the northern parts of that province, a man, holding nothing in the left hand, goes from the South towards the West, then towards the North till he reaches the Merh or limit, or pole : he then returns the same way, and goes towards the East till he reaches the pole, and back again to the South—he then places the basket on the ground, and makes the same obeisance, concluding with some pious ejaculation. In the Southern portion of Rohilkhand they generally press their hands from bottom to top in six different parts of the heap, and repeat each time the name of one of the Chakravartti Rajas, such as Mandhata, Ben, Dalíp, etc.

In the Lower and Central Doáb and Saugor, the ceremony generally consists in making a circle with cow-dung or ashes round the Ras and Thapa at the same time, commencing from the East, and going from South to West till the East point is again reached ; the operator taking care all the while to hold his breath. Sometimes the South is again reached by going back again from the East, and thus a complete circle is not formed. The part from the East to the South being left, because from that part the presentations to the Brahmans and gods are taken and put aside. The same happens at the Pakarma in worship, for a more obvious reason, that the foot may not overstep the running water.

In most other places the ceremony of going round the Thápa, or heap formed for the village servants, is somewhat different. The man goes from the South to the North, and back again, not placing his foot anywhere on the Eastern side, because that is the aman or kand, which contains the refuse corn belonging to the Chamars, which having fallen behind the winnower, is of a very inferior quality.

The entire ceremony of Chánk is gone through with the utmost silence, which is to be observed till the grain is measured and distributed. The reason is said to be that evil sprites who “bootless make the breathless housewife churn,” injure the corn if any talking takes place.

All these rites, ridiculous as they are, are devoutly supposed to be efficacious for obtaining the advantages which it is their aim and object to secure, and though from the influence of the opinions of their utilitarian masters the common people are getting gradually weaned from their credulity and superstition, and these trifling observances begin to be less thought of than they were a century ago, a long time yet will elapse before they cease to be practised.

Chhaur,

چہور کौर

Walking a boundary with a raw cowskin on the head, under a solemn oath to decide correctly. Five sticks are also held in the hand, to imply that the arbitrator is the representative of the Pancháyat.

The word is in use in the North-West. Muñchhandarí (मुंछहंदरी) is used in Saugor and Rajputana, and Dill in Benares, in which latter province the Harbans Purána is laid on the head.—See Gola.

Chhattur,

چہتر کتور

Is the name given to the covering placed on a heap of winnowed corn, from the Hindi कतुर Chhattar, an umbrella. It is known also by the names of Barháwan and Chánk, q.v. In Benares it is generally a mere cake of cow-dung; elsewhere, it is a shoot of grass, or a dry stick of Arhar, with several (generally five) projecting twigs, on each of which a small piece of cow-dung is placed, or a flower of the Ak or Madar (Asclepias gigantea). Sometimes a spear is stuck in the ground, not on, but at the side of the heap, and sometimes an artificial flower is placed at a short distance from the bottom of the heap.

The object in fixing the Chhattur upon or near the corn, is to prevent the effect of an evil eye, or the injury which is sure to be sustained from the praises of any casual visitor. It is for this reason that natives, when their children are sent out on a visit, always place upon their cheek or forehead some black spot, as it is considered to have the virtue of preventing the effects which would be occasioned by any expression of admiration. By the superstitious natives of this country, the Chhattur is devoutly believed to offer a sure remedy against the disastrous effects of fascination. If his Rás or heap be but surmounted with this fanciful emblem, the husbandman may sleep secure; but as sure as he neglects it, should an evil eye fall upon the grain, it is infallibly gone, and he will have to weep over the lost hopes of a year's labours.

Chamráwat, جمراوت चमरावट

The perquisites of Chamars.

Dáen, दाइन दाएं

Dáen, or Dáona, is the tying of a number of bullocks together for the purpose of treading out the grain from the ear. As in this action they are invariably driven from the right to left, these words may perhaps have some connection with Dahina, the right hand.

Dánt tinká, दान्त तंका दांत तिनका

The taking a straw, or piece of grass, in the mouth, to deprecate anger, or to express complete submission. The action is generally accompanied by standing on one leg, which puts the supplicant in a ludicrous position. The custom shews the reverence of the Hindús for the cow, the action implying, "I am your cow, and therefore entitled to your protection." The custom is very old, and is alluded to in the inscription on the Lat of Fíroz-Shah, at Dehli. "Tears are evident in the eyes of the enemy's consort; blades of grass are perceived between thy adversaries' teeth ("As. Researches, Vol. VII. p. 180). The image also is not rejected by the poets. Muhammad Aman Nisar says—

رنگ دکھایا جو زرد عاشق رنجور نے

خوف سے تنکا لیا دانتوں میں کافور نے

"When the afflicted lover shewed his sallow face, Káfúr, through fear, seized the grass with his teeth."

Dáridr khedná, داردر کھیدنا داریدر خیدنا

Literally, to drive out poverty; a custom observed on the morning of the Dewalí, of taking a sieve, or winnowing basket, and beating it in every corner of the house, exclaiming at the same time—that is, God enter, and poverty depart; or some equivalent prayer. The basket is then carried outside the village, generally towards the East or North-East, and being there thrown away, is supposed, like the scape-goat with respect to the sins of the Israelites, to bear with it the poverty and distress of the people. In some places this ceremony is called Serua, and, instead of beating a sieve, the people brush the house, and carry out the dirt in a basket.

ईश्वर पैठो दरिद्र निकलो

The night preceding this observance is passed in watchfulness, and is hence called Kojagara; as Lakshmi descended on this night, and promised wealth to those who were awake. It is enjoined that men should play on this night some game of chance with their wives, which requisition is in practice construed to mean a general indulgence in gambling.

People do not now, as a rule, play cards with their wives, but parties of merchants collect for the purpose and play all night. Large sums of money change hands over the cards on this night.

Dáwan, داون दावन

The process of thrashing by means of bullocks, in the mode adopted by almost all Eastern nations.—See Dáen.

Dípán, दीपदान दीपदान

Land assigned to Brahmans on the banks of rivers, to deprecate river encroachments.—E. Oudh and Benares. The word is derived from द्वीप, an island, and दान, a gift.

The same word, but derived from dípa, a lamp, is applied to a ceremony observed for ten days after the decease of a relative. It consists in suspending from a Pípal, or some other tree, a lamp, for the purpose of lighting the departed spirit on the dark road to Jampúrí (Yamapuri). This place is declared in the sacred books to be the general rendezvous of the departed from all parts of the world, from which they proceed in a body with a proper guard, composed of the servants of Yama (Pluto), to Dharmapuri.—As. Res., Vol. X., p. 145.

Díwár, दीवार दीवार

Perhaps more correctly Dihwar, is the god under whose special care a village is placed; the Genius loci for whom a portion of grain is always set apart at each harvest.—Benares.

The corresponding term in the North-West is Thanapati (the lord of the place). In Bundelkhand, Gram Deota. In Saugor he is styled Miroyá मिडोया, from the fact of his being the guardian of boundaries (see note to Damcha). The Díwár is very commonly, and even where these local names prevail, styled Bhúmia, from Bhúm, land.

The Díwárs have various names, such as Katesarí, Barnai-chu, Hanwat, Bhúm Sen, Chanwar, Kashínath, Mansa Ram, Hardaur, Ratnú, Harí Ram, Jharkhand Iswar, Kall Sen, Bisharí; oft times they are the spirits* of good men, Brahmans, or village heroes, who manage, when they become objects of worship, to be generally considered very malicious devils; and oft times they are nothing but mere epithets of the Dii Majores. In some places their images are of male, in others of female, figures. In many places the villagers, for fear of misrepresenting their Gram Deota, erect a stone without form or feature; like the “si Deo si Deæ” of the Romans, which ambiguous expression was addressed to their tutelary gods, to obviate all chance of mistake.

The worship of these village gods is fixed to no stated day. In some places it occurs on the 14th of every month; in others, on the full moon of Chait; at others, on the full moon of Katik, and so on.

It has been supposed by Dr. Stephenson, 'of Bombay, that these Díwárs, or Grama Deotas, are the remnants of the ante-Brahmanical religion; but the supposition cannot be received as correct concerning our provinces, though it may be conceded with respect to the Gods of the South of India that there are many circumstances of their worship which are not of Hindú origin.—(See “Bombay Literary Transactions;” “Journal R. A. S.” Nos. IX. and X.; Buchanan’s “Eastern India,” Vol. II. pp. 138, 352, 478; and Wilson’s “Hindú Theatre,” Vol. I. p. 21, and Vol. I. p. 64.)

Deothán,	دیوٹھان	द्वौठान
See Dithwan.

Dhák,	ڈھاک	ढाक
Dháka,	ڈھاکہ	ढाका
Dhákha,	دھاکھا	धाखा

Name of a tree (Butea frondosa). The bark furnishes an important exudation called the Palas gond, or Bengal Kino ; and a strong kind of rope is also made from the root, called Bukel. It has also many other uses. Its wood is valued for coating wells, and it is also much sought after for the purpose of making a hom, or sacrificial fire. The flowers are in clusters and bright red. When pounded, they produce an excellent yellow dye, which is frequently, amongst other purposes, applied to form the Holi powder. The "Tálif-i-Sharíf" says, that "when the white flowers are found, and any one shall eat the seeds, his heart will be cleansed, his understanding increased, and he shall be endowed with supernatural knowledge." The common Dhak which is found all over the uncultivated plains of Northern India is a stunted tree, and never attains the height that it does in and under the hills.—See Chhiúl.

* An instance is mentioned by Lieutenant Colonel Sleeman, in his “Rambles and Recollections,” of a village settlement having been made with the ghost of a former, instead of with the living, incumbent.

Dhokhá, دھوکھا धोखा

A scarecrow ; from a word signifying deception. In Rohilkhand the term Ujká is sometimes used ; in Central Doáb, Ojhak and Ojpo, from उजकना ujakná, to start, to be alarmed ; and for the same reason a scarecrow is called Daráwar in Dehli, from डराना, to frighten.—See Bijhgah and Dhúha.

Dhúhá, دھوھا दूहा

A scarecrow. Dhúhá, or more correctly Dhúá दूआ, also signifies a clod or mound of earth raised as a boundary mark. These mounds are about four feet high, and fixed round the limits of each township, at the distance of about two hundred yards from one another. As the Dhúhá is merely made of earth, it requires constant renewal and repair.—See Damcha, Daula, and Hadbandí.

Dhajá, دھجا धजा

A standard, a strip of cloth. Dhajá, or rather Dhojá, which is more in accordance with the Sanskrit ध्वज, is also the name given to the pole, with a strip of cloth attached, which is erected in fulfilment of a vow near some place of worship, by a person who has succeeded in any important object. It is also the name given to the standard tied to a tree, or raised in some elevated position on the Pavan Parichha, the last day of the month Asárh. From the direction of the wind at sunset on that day, the people draw their auguries of the coming season. On this occasion the banias, or grain-dealers, are observed to be more anxious consulters than the agriculturists, and their anxiety gives rise to the saying of “Bania ka paní.” This is the response if the pendant shows a westerly wind, and indicates the probability of a dry season. If a little more favorable, it is “Kumhár ka paní,” or suitable to potters, as they also delight in dry weather. If from the north, moderate rains may be expected, and the answer is “Máli ka paní,” or suitable to gardeners. If from the east, copious rains are to be looked for, and the season is said to enjoy “Dhobí ka paní,” or a deluge sufficient to satisfy a washerman. These sayings, though not general, have currency in many parts of the country, especially in Brij.*

Dithwan,

دٲٲون दिठवन

The Ekadasí, or 11th of the bright half of the month Katik, which day is also known by the name of Bodini.† On this day a ceremony is observed in celebration of Vishnu’s return from

* Káli Rái says, “On that day the villagers weigh out carefully one or two tolas of each kind of grain, and leave them in little earthen dishes in a clear place in the jungle all night. In the morning they go and weigh them again. If the weight is greater than it was overnight they anticipate a good season, and vice versá.—E. add.

† J.R.A.S., XIII., 6, Káli Rái says, “This is the first day of reaping the sugar-cane: after lighting a lamp and doing pújá, they tie a red thread round five canes, and breaking a little off, they distribute it among their neighbours.”—E. add.

his slumber of four months, during which he is represented to have been with Raja Bal in Pátál, or the infernal regions.

May Vishnu's shrinking glance
Yield peace and joy—as waking from his trance
His opening eyes are dazzled by the rays
From lamps divine that blaze :
Those eyes that with long slumber red
Ambrosial tear-drops shed,
As pillowed on his snake-couch mid the deep
He breaks reluctant from his fated sleep.

—Mudra Rakshasha.

No marriages and but few festive ceremonies have taken place in the meantime, and the Dithwan is the signal for their commencement. Houses are cleaned, and smeared afresh with cow-dung, and the fruit of the Singhara and Ber and Chanaka-ság, and other dainties of the season may be lawfully enjoyed.

But amongst agriculturists it is more especially celebrated for its connexion with the cutting of the sugar-cane. All Hindus of correct habits will carefully abstain till this day from touching the crop ; but on the Dithwan, a little is taken from the corner of the field, brought home, and spread out for the reception of the Saligrám, which in due form is lifted up several times, an action significant of Vishnu's rising from his slumber. He is waked, according to the “ Matsya Purana,” by this incantation—“The clouds are dispersed, the full moon will appear in perfect brightness, and I come in hope of acquiring purity to offer the fresh flowers of the season : awake from thy slumber, awake, O Lord of all worlds.”

When this worship is duly performed, and the officiating Brahman declares the fortunate moment for beginning operations, the cutting is commenced. The whole village is a scene of hilarity, and dancing and singing are the order of the day.

Dithwan is variously called Dataund, Daiten, Dashtun, Dutaun, according to the degree of ignorance of the speaker.

The proper name of the ceremony is Deothan, or “the standing up of the God.” In Shakespear’s and Smyth’s Dictionaries this is said to occur on the second day of the light half of the month of Kátik; but that festival is usually called Bhaiaduj Jamdutyá, or in Sanskrit Bhrátridwitiya, on which day sisters feed and pay some kind of ceremonial worship to their brothers.

What the ceremony of Dithwan is to the sugar-cane, that of Arwan is to the shamakh and barley grain.—See Arwan and Júrí.

Daliyájhár, ڈلیاجہار डलियाझार

The conclusion of the sowing season; literally, the brushing out of the sowing basket. It is called by various other names as Kuñr mundlá, Hariar, Bai-bharí, and Kuñr-Bojí. Amongst the agricultural population of the Upper Provinces, as in most other parts of the world, it is a season of joy and relaxation.

Dam madár, دم مدار दम मदार

The ceremony of performing the Dhammal, or Dam Madar, is very popular with the agricultural and lower classes in Upper Hindústán. It consists in jumping into a fire, and treading it out, with the exclamation of “Dam Madar! Dam Madar!” that is, “by the breath of Madar, by the breath of Madar.” It is devoutly believed that not a hair of these devotees gets singed, and that those who have practised the ceremony are secure against the venom of snakes and scorpions.

Badíu’din Shah Madar, in honor of whom this ceremony annually takes place, was, according to the Mirat-i-Madarea, a converted Jew. He is said to have been born at Aleppo in 1050 A.D. and to have come to India in the reign of Sultan Ibrahím Sharkí; and having taken up his abode between Cawnpore and Farrakhabad, and expelled therefrom an evil genius, called Makan Deo, who infested the place, he gave the name of Makanpúr to his residence, and was buried there in 1433 A.D. at the good old age of nearly four hundred years! The tomb, which is a handsome structure, was raised over him by Sultan Ibrahím. He is believed still to be alive, and hence is frequently styled Zinda Shah Madar. The prophet Mahomet gave him the power of habs-i-dam, or retention of breath, and hence arose his longevity, as the number of his respirations was diminished at pleasure.

There is a large concourse of people at his tomb during the first seventeen days of Jamadiu'l awwal, and the fair, or festival, is known by the names of Chhari, Mední, Charaghan, and Badi. The two ceremonies of Dhammal Khelna and Gaí lútana, which take place on the seventeenth of the month, are fully described in the Kanún-i-Islam. Mrs. Mír Hasan Ali tells us that women can never with safety to themselves enter the mausoleum containing the saint's ashes, for they are immediately seized with violent pains, as if their whole body was immersed in flames of fire.

There is a class of Fakírs called Madarea, after his name. They generally wear black clothes, and are much addicted to the use of intoxicating drugs.*

Dandázaní, دَنْدَازَنِی डण्डाजनी

A mode of torture said in Mr. W. W. Bird's Report, dated 25th May, 1827, to have been practised by the subordinate officers in the private domains of the Raja of Benares. It consists in fastening a man's arms behind his back with a cord, which is twisted round by means of a stick, so as to increase the tension until the pain inflicted by it becomes intolerable. The other modes were Áwangilli and Sundrízaní.

* References are: As. J., 1831, Vol. IV., p. 76: Ṭabaqat-i Shahjaháni, p. 15; Yádgár-i Bahádurí, p. 281; Daulat Rái Chaman, I.; Dabistan, II., 244; III., 307.—B.

Áwangilli is compelling a man to stand astride with each foot on an inverted earthen vessel, placed so far apart as to endanger his dropping between them; while a Chaprassí stands by to flog him, unless he exerts himself as much as possible to keep erect.

Sundrízaní is striking with a double flapper made of thick leather; although the particular instrument made use of at the Raja's Kutcherri was the leathern case of a Gadka, or single stick, stuffed with bran. It was used instead of a slipper to coerce the better sort of defaulters, as being less disgraceful.

Daijá,

دیجا दैजा

A dowry, or portion which the wife brings a husband in marriage.

Wilson, in a note to Mill's India (Vol. I., p. 447), says that "amongst the Hindus the practice of purchasing a bride by a dower is apparently of modern growth, and a violation of the law." There are passages in Manu on the subject which appear contradictory.

"Let no father who knows the law receive a gratuity, however small, for giving his daughter in marriage; since the man who through avarice takes a gratuity for that purpose, is a seller of his offspring."—Institutes III. 51.

"He who takes to wife a damsel of full age shall not give a nuptial present to her father" (IX. 93); which implies that under ordinary circumstances a present was given.

Again, "If after one damsel has been shown, another be offered to the bridegroom who had purchased leave to marry her from her next kinsman, he may become the husband of both for the same price. This law Manu ordained."—VIII. 204.

These passages would imply the observance of both practices; and the same may perhaps have continued till the time of the Greek invasion, for Arrian (Indica, CXVII.) says the Indians neither took nor gave money in marriage; while Megasthenes (Strabo, Lib. XV.) says their wives were purchased for a yoke of oxen.

Amongst the agricultural tribes in the North-West Provinces, the present practice is most usual for the bride's father to purchase the bridegroom, so that the man receives the dowry,* or Daijá, which consists for the most part of money and household utensils. Thus, even when the daughter of Jai Chand was forcibly abducted by Pirthí raja, the father sends to him "the richest gems, the fruits of the victory of Bijay Pal, inestimable wealth, pearls, elephants, and dyes." Thus also, the same hero, when he marries the daughter of the Dahima of Biana, receives from his father-in-law "eight beauteous damsels, sixty-three female slaves, one hundred chosen Irak horses, two elephants, ten shields, a pallet of silver for the bride, one hundred wooden images, one hundred chariots, and one thousand pieces of gold."

This system, the fruitful source of female infanticide, arises from the almost universal desire to obtain for the daughter the privilege of marrying into a higher family, which is only to be acquired by purchase. Thus among Rajputs and Brahmans, the relative position of the several clans can be easily ascertained by learning with what families sons and daughters respectively intermarry. The sons marry those of an inferior stock, and receive money for the condescension; the daughters marry those of a superior stock, and their parents have to pay for the privilege. Where perfect equality reigns (and mutual convenience, as well as the gradual extinction of ancient prejudices, are slowly tending to this result), sons and daughters of three or four different stocks intermarry; and as alliances are thus not sought for mere honor and distinction, the payment of exorbitant prices is obviated. Sometimes, indeed, an imaginary purchase is made, as a type of a custom of which the breach is thought preferable to the observance.

It may be as well to subjoin, in further illustration of this

* Dowry the wife is of course entitled to by the laws of inheritance.

subject, the following passages from Steele's "Summary of the Law and Custom of Hindoo Castes":—

"Usoor is the 5th variety of marriage, where the girl is taken in exchange for wealth, and married. This species is peculiar to the Byse and Soodra castes." "The sale of a girl in marriage is forbidden, and the money, if unpaid, is an unlawful debt."

"The lower castes often receive money on the marriage of their females, called Hoonda, which is the characteristic of the 5th (Usoor) variety, and it is suspected that Brahmins occasionally, in the present avaricious generation, incur sin on this account."

"A poor family, to avoid the disgrace of receiving Hoonda, will sometimes marry their daughter into a family of similar circumstances; or an intermarriage may be agreed on both sides."—Pp. 31, 161, 166.

See also Macnaghten's "Principles and Precedents of Hindu Law," Vol. I., chap. 5.*

Ghází míyán,† غازي میان گاجی میاں

This saint is in high repute with the agricultural and lower classes of these provinces, except in Dehli, and is included among the Panchpíri. (See Hathíle.) Notwithstanding he did his best to exterminate the Kafirs, he is as much worshipped by the Hindus as the Musulmans. An annual fair‡ takes place

* On the subject of female infanticide among the Rajputs there is an interesting chapter in Mr. C. Raikes's "Notes on the N. W. Provinces," 1852, which details the steps taken to put a stop to this crime. A much older work by E. Moor, published in 1811, on the same subject, is also worth looking at, as it contains curious notices of the habits of the people in several parts of India. See also "Selections from Rec. N.W.P.," III., pp. 1-10, and pp. 167-210, as regards Agra.—B.

† Dabistan, III., 213; Firoz Shah, p. i., 272, 320; Yádgár-i Bahádurí, p. 262; Beale's Miftah, 56.—E. add.

‡ Sikandar Lodi endeavoured to suppress this fair, as partaking too much of Pagan idolatry, but without success.

in his honour in the month of Jeth. On these occasions, a long pole is paraded about, crowned at the top with bushy hair, which is said to represent the head of the martyr, which kept rolling on long after it was separated from the trunk.* The fair takes place at most large towns, but the greatest concourse of pilgrims is at Bahraich, where he lies buried. This fair is commonly styled the "Nuptials of Ghází Míyán," because it is said he had on his bridal clothes, and was about to be married, when he was martyred. The "Mirát-i Masa'udí," however, says only that he had a dream the night before his death, in which his mother came and placed a bridal chaplet on his brow, as being indicative of the crown of martyrdom with which he was to be honoured on the following day. It is said in the "Araish-i Maḥfil" that an oilman of Radaulí first established the custom, by carrying a bed and other nuptial paraphernalia every year to Bahraich, being persuaded that the saint annually renews the ceremony. He is, partly on this account, called Gajna Dúlha, and Salar China. M. Garcin de Tassy, in his "Mémoire" on the Musulman religion in India, page 81, states that Mr. H. H. Wilson entertains doubts about the representation of the marriage, and conceives that Shadí, "Marriage," has been written by mistake for Shahadat, "Martyrdom;" but there is no occasion to dispute the correctness of the word or the fact of the ceremony.

Who this Ghází Míyán was is a question on which even Musulman authorities are not agreed. In the "Kánún-i Islam" he is said to be the same as Rajab Sálár. In the "Akhhár-ul Akhyár," he is said to be the same as Pír Bahlím. Some say he was a Sayyid, others a Pathan. Ferishta and the author of the "Súbah-i Sádik" say he was a descendant of Mahmúd of Ghazní, and was killed at Bahraich in A.D. 1162. Abú-l Fazl says he was a relation of that king. The most detailed, and apparently the most authentic, account of him is given in the

* There is no authority for this statement.—E. add.

“Mirātu-l Asrār” and the “Mirát-i Masa’udí.* In them he is stated to have been the son of Mír Sahú, who married Satr-i Mu’alla, the sister of Mahmúd of Ghazní. He was born at Ajmír in A.H. 405, and by his feats of arms in Guzerat, and advice at Somnath, obtained so much notice from Mahmúd, as even to have excited the envy of the Emperor’s favourite slave Ayaz.† These histories then enter into an account of his proceedings at Ghazní, Kashmír, Multan, Dehli, Mírat, and Kanauj, the Raja of which place, Jaypál, is said to have been restored through the saint’s intercession with the angry Emperor. His subsequent conquests, and those of his followers, on the other side of the Ganges and Gogra, are then given, and if they could be thoroughly relied on, would be of much interest. It is then related how the news of the death of Sultan Mahmúd inspired the Indian princes with the hope of retrieving their independence, and how an army of infidels assembled at Bahraich, under Raja Sháhar Deo, for the purpose of exterminating the faithful, and how, after three severe contests he gloriously fell a martyr on the field of battle in A.H. 424, at the early age of nineteen. The memorial verse which gives the dates of his birth and death runs thus:—

“In four hundred and five he came into existence; in four hundred and twenty-four he took his departure !

The cause of his being frequently called, both in Khurasan and India, Rajab Sálár, is that there is a tomb of that personage also at Bahraich, and the name of Sálár, meaning prince,

* These works were written in Jehangir’s time, by ‘Abdu’r rahmán, who states that his details are founded on the account given by Mulla Muhammad of Ghazní, a companion of our Saint and his father. As this work is said to give a full account of the Emperor Mahmúd, it would be worth examination.

† This person frequently figures among the anecdotes of the East, and there are some which tell greatly in favor of his humble deportment in the midst of prosperity. He is the subject of a famous Masnaví by Jalálí.—See Stewart’s “Catalogue of Tippoo Sultan’s Library,” p. 57.

which is common to both, has created confusion in the minds of those who have not sufficiently examined the question.

Who this Rajab Sálár was is also a doubtful point, but it is certain that he has no claims to saintship, like our Sálár Masa'ud, or Ghází Míyán. Abú'l Fazl, in his account of the Suba of Oudh says he was the father of the illustrious Fíroz Shah ; and we learn from the "Shams-i Siráji" that Rajab Sálár was the name of Fíroz Shah's father, but from this account it does not appear that he died in the neighbourhood of, or was buried at, Bahraich. Now, the "Mirát-i Masa'udí" expressly says that Rajab Sálár was one of the followers of Ghází Míyán, that he was induced to seek his fortunes in India because some rent-free land of his was unjustly resumed, that he was made the Kotwal of Ghází Míyán's camp, and that he was buried at Bahraich. This latter, therefore, would appear to be the Rajab Sálár, who is frequently taken for Ghází Míyán.

Ghegará,

گھگرا घेगरा

Ghegará, or Gheghará, is the unripe pod of Gram. Also, the unripe bole of cotton, which is known also by the names of Gúlar, Ghentí, and Bhitná. When it bursts it assumes another name.

When this change begins to occur in a cotton field, some kind of superstitious ceremony is observed in most parts of the country, which is generally known by the name of Phurakna. To the Eastward of the Jumna it is most usual to select the largest plant in the field, and having sprinkled it with butter-milk and rice water, it is bound all over with pieces of cotton, taken from the other plants of the field. This selected plant is called Sirdar, or Bhogaldaí, i.e., mother-cotton, from bhogla, a name sometimes given to a large cotton-pod, and daí (for daiya) a mother, and after salutations are made to it, prayers are offered that the other plants may resemble it in the richness of their produce. To the West of the Jumna there is rarely a Bhogaldaí, but when the pods begin to burst, women go round the field, and, as a kind of lustration, throw salt into it, with similar supplications that the produce may be abundant.—(J. R. A. S., XIII. 29.)

Ghelauní, گیلونی چیلانی

Ghelauní, which is more generally known by the name of Rúk روك, is much the same in kind as dastúrí is in money—something taken by the purchaser in addition to the nominal selling price. A familiar illustration is given of this in the article Harbong ka Raj. Another instance of Ghelauní is found in the common practice of adding so many Panjas or fives, to the hundred, without which it is not considered a complete hundred. Thus 110 bamboos, 120 mangoes, 130 melons, 115 carrots, and so on, will only be considered in the light of perfect hundreds of each respectively, according to the practice prevailing in the several bazars.

Gogá pír, گوغا پیر گوغا پیر

The agriculturists of the Dehli territory and the Upper Doáb regard this saint with superstitious reverence, and crowd to his shine with their offerings in the month of Bhadon. The Kánún-i Islam, and M. Garcin de Tassy, quoting the Barah Masa, say his tomb is somewhere in the Doáb; but in this they are mistaken, as it lies nearly two hundred miles to the South-West of Hissar, and twenty miles beyond a place called Dadrera. As these authors confess their entire ignorance* respecting Gogá, it may be as well to subjoin a few particulars respecting him. He is called by the Mahrattas Zahir Pír, and is with them a favourite saint. The local tradition respecting him is that he was the son of a Chauhán Rajput, called Vachá, according to some ; according to others, Jewar, whose wife Bachal, a Túar, produced him, after being long barren, at the kind intercession of Gorakhnath. There is a clan of Musulman Chauháns even now resident in the neighbourhood of his tomb (see Chahil); the Gogáwats of the desert are descended from him, and the Gogadeo ka thal is called after his name. His territory extended from Hansi to the Garra (Ghara), and his capital was Mehera on that river. In a quarrel about land he killed his two brothers, on which account he drew down upon himself the anger of his mother. To escape her imprecations he fled to the jungles, and there wished that the earth might open and swallow him up, but a voice from heaven declared that he could not have the satisfaction of being buried alive, horse* and all, unless he uttered the Kaláma and became a Musulman. He appears to have had no difficulty in doing this, upon which the earth opened before him, and he leaped into its bosom.

* Cet ouvrage (Barah Masa) est le seul, de ceux que j'ai pu consulter, où il soit question de Goga.—Mémoire sur des part. de la Rel. Musulmane, p. 89.

His claims to saintship are not very distinct. He is said to have been a contemporary of Pirthí Rájá, and to have fought with desperate valour against the Mahomedans ; but there is more reason to suppose that he must have contended with the earlier Ghaznvide monarchs, for several favorite ballads relate how he fell with his forty-five sons and sixty nephews, opposing the great Mahmúd on the banks of the Garra. The above is an abridged account of the tradition, with the omission of all the detailed particulars, some of which are interesting.

In the Eastern portion of these Provinces, where distance overcomes the zeal for pilgrimage, it is usual for the Bhangís to carry round the sacred symbols of the Pír in the month of Bhadon, and to raise contributions. The Agarwala Banyas are particularly sought after on this occasion. Their original emigration from Agroha, beyond Haryana, was no doubt once considered a sufficient reason why the symbols of their illustrious countryman, Gogá, should be paraded before their eyes. But perhaps few in these times have ever thought why the Agarwalas are supposed to be, more than any other class, especially favorable to Gogá, and the present continuance of this ceremony on the return of the proper season, after all knowledge of its origin has utterly faded from remembrance, shews the marvellous permanence which usages, in themselves puerile, will sometimes attain, when they are commemorative of an historical fact. The one we are now alluding to has been preserved through a succession of ages, and under the most unfavorable circumstances. At Ujayyin there is a temple of Gogá Sháhí, and his day is the ninth of the dark half of Bhadon. His votaries carry a black flag.—See “As. Res.” VI., 41; Cunningham’s “Sikhs,” p. 13.

* His horse has been immortalised under the name of Javadia. The chroniclers relate that Goga was childless, until his guardian deity bestowed upon him two barley-corns (jao or java), one of which he gave to his wife, the other to his favorite mare, which produced in consequence the famous steed Javadia. Some accounts assert that these two barley corns, or cocoa-nuts, were given to Goga's mother. The story, however, is too long and trifling to be inserted here.

Gohar,

گوهر गोहर

A broad pathway for cattle, of which the preservation is considered as obligatory as that of a boundary. The rural denunciation, attributed, like so many others, to Sahdeo, one of the five Pandu heroes, runs—

जो कोई तोडिगा डौल वा गोहर वा करे
कि बोएंगे और कि रहेंगे परे

That is, “may the man who destroys a boundary, a cowpath, or a ditch, have his lands sown by others, or may they lie waste.” It is also called Dagar, and Dahar.

Golá,

गोला गोला

A mode of ordeal formerly much practised in fixing bounddaries. It consisted in taking a red-hot ball in the palms of the hand, which were only protected by Pípal leaves. If the arbitrator, in walking the boundary with the Golá, escaped unscathed, his testimony was considered true, and the boundary adjusted accordingly.—See Chhaur.

Guptdán, گپت دان गुप्तदान

Literally, a hidden donation ; an ostentatious mode of giving alms in secret to Brahmans, especially at Kurchhettar (the ancient Kurukshetra, about thirty miles south of the British station of Amballa), during the sun's eclipse, at which times this sacred place is as much resorted to as Benares is on the occasion of an eclipse of the moon. The devotee immerses himself in the sacred pool, and leaves his donation at the bottom, which occasions the Brahmans no small trouble to recover.

Guptdán also consists in leaving horses or clothes in the pretended care of a Brahman, and not returning to claim them ; also, in giving a closed bag of coin, so that the receiver does not know, till the donor's back is turned, whether gold or copper has been bestowed upon him.

Gopashtamí, گوپشتمی गोपष्टमी

Is the name given to the eighth day of the bright half of the month of Kátik. On this day, as well as on the Godhan (Govardhan), the day after the Dewálí, garlands are suspended from the necks of cows, their horns, hoofs, and bodies are painted, and salutations are made to them.

Gadhe ká hál, گدھی کا ہل गधे का हल

Literally, a donkey's plough. Before the British accession, it was not uncommon to yoke donkeys in a plough, and drive them over the ruins of a captured fort, as a mode of shewing supreme contempt for the vanquished enemy. The furrows thus raised were levelled by the Lohe kí maí, or iron harrow.

This mode of wreaking vengeance has been in especial favour with Eastern nations, and was practised by Jenghiz Khan and Timúr with unrelenting severity. Hence the common expression “I shall sow barley where you now stand.” See the vaunt of the Bandit-Minstrel Kurroglou, at p. 138 of “Popular Poetry of Persia.”

Gadhe par charhána, گدھے پر چڑھانا गधे पर चढ़ाना

Literally, to seat upon a jackass. This is a punishment more commonly known by the Arabic تشهير publication, celebration; which is rendered by Golius, “Per urbem duci jussit sontem in exemplum: fere asino aut camelo impositum.” In India, when this punishment was ordained, the criminal was seated with his face to the tail of a donkey, and old shoes, rags, and the like were suspended from his neck in derision.

A tashhír, or public exposure with the face blackened, is expressly declared to be the punishment inflicted by Umr upon a false witness, in addition to forty stripes: though Abu Hanífa and his two disciples differ as to whether the punishment should be considered a sentence of Tázír or Síasat.—See “Hedaya,” Vol. II., pp. 715, 716; and “Harington’s Analysis,” Vol. I., p. 287.

The first intimation we have of a Tashhír in the Mahomedan history of India is when Saifu’d dín Ghorí was captured in Ghazni. He had his forehead blackened, and was seated astride on a bullock with his face towards the tail; and after enduring the shouts and insults of the mob, he was tortured and finally beheaded.—Tawárikh-i Guzída.

It is generally supposed that this punishment was introduced into India by the Mahomedans; but this is a mistake, for in the Institutes of Manu (Cap. VIII. 370) it is ordained, “If a woman shall be guilty of the offence mentioned, she shall have her head instantly shaved, and two of her fingers chopped, and she shall ride mounted on an ass through the public street."

The punishment has for many years been discontinued in British territories in India.

In Europe there was formerly a superstition that sitting on, or speaking to an ass was a cure for scorpion-bites. In India it is also believed that, if a person is bitten by a scorpion, he may be cured by the following ceremony:—A young male buffalo-calf is selected, in preference to a donkey, as being a purer animal, and into its ear is whispered the following incantation (which probably has no meaning at all; at least, only faint glimmerings of sense can be detected in it):—

बीछी बीछी तोरे कै जाती वारह वरन अठारह जाती
अठारहौ चली समुद्र अन्हाय छाकारी छापेरी कारवाररवाई
समुद्र के तीर एक वर का बिरवा तेहिमा रहै बीछि का किरवा
झारौं बीछि उतारौं किरवा उतरो बीछि डांसे आउ

When this jargon has been duly uttered by the messenger, he returns to the bitten patient, and is sure to find him fully recovered.

Whether, as in the case of the Fables of Syntipas and the Arabian Nights, the origin is to be ascribed to India, is doubtful. It is more probable that the superstition is derived from some of the translations of the Greek medical writers, which were made in the time of the Khalifa Mámún; and this is somewhat confirmed by observing that it is not so much the common people who entertain this persuasion, as those who profess to have made some acquaintance with Oriental literature.

Híráná,

هیرانا हीराना

Manuring a field by penning a herd of cattle or flock of sheep in it for several hours.—E. Oudh. Khatáná is used in a similar sense in Rohilkhand.

Halbarár, هلبارار हलबरार

Assessment according to the number of ploughs. Collections at a certain sum per plough.

Haláitá हालिता हलाइता

The first ploughing of the season, which is generally preceded by the taking of omens, and other superstitious ceremonies. The note of the Koil bird, amongst other auguries, is considered very favorable, and its utterance is of such authority as to enable the cultivator to dispense with a formal application to a Brahman.—See Haríta. This bird directs other operations besides agriculture. Thus, कोइल बोली सिबन्दी डोली, i.e. the disbanding of the armed men for collection of revenue depended on the Koil's note, "Sibandy" being a corruption of Sipah Hindí, in distinction to Mughal or foreign troops, who were always kept up.

The Koil, indeed, occupies much the same place in India that the cuckoo does in Europe.

It also resembles the European species in being "the nursling of a stranger nest;" and, according to popular belief, selects a crow's nest for the place of deposit. A Hindi verse says, "Whose property has the crow taken, to whom has the Koil given it? Her sweet notes have captivated the whole world."

Harbong ká ráj, هر بونگت کا راج हरबोंग का राज

This expression, which literally means Harbong's Government, is applied to signify civil disorder and mal-administration. Roebuck ("Oriental Proverbs," Part II., p. 187) says that "Hurbhoom is the name of a village near Ilahabad, infamous for injustice." But the name of Harbhúm, which is more usually pronounced Harbong, and sometimes Harbhong, is given to the Raja, and the scene of his injustice is called Harbongpúr.

Harbongpúr is now known by the name of Jhúnsí, or Jhúsí, on the left bank of the Ganges, opposite to Allahabad,* and opposite to Arail,† on the right bank of the Jumna. It will be seen from the notes below that the names of these places were changed by Akbar, and Jhúsí itself shared the same fate,

* Immediately before Akbar's time this place was known as Píág, or Prág, both corruptions of the Sanskrit Prayága; by him it was denominated Allahabas, which subsequently became Allahabad. The name is more correctly Ilahabad, or Ilahabad, as given by Captain Roebuck, but I adopt the usual practise of writing it Allahabad. Whether, when Sháhjahán changed the terminal bas into bad, which had been adopted by his grandfather in deference to the Hindús (see Dastúr), he also changed the Ilah into Allah, does not appear from any author who treats of the subject; but the alteration would not have been unreasonable, for there is a marked distinction between the two terms. [Ilah ^{إِلَٰه} means a god in general; Allah ^{ٱللَّهُ} is the same word having incorporated with it the article ^{ٱلْ}. It therefore means "the God," i.e. the only God. Ilah thus means an idol, a false god, and Prayág was so called by the Mahomedans as being the shrine of the false gods of the Indians. Allahabad is a mere English corruption of this name. The correct pronunciation of Ilahabad is still retained and used by all educated natives. There is no reason for supposing that Sháhjahán or any one else ever thought of changing the first syllable of the name.—B.] From some passages in the early Indian historians it would appear that they confounded the famous Somnath with the Arabian Ilah or Ilat; and though it certainly would be no uninteresting enquiry to trace the real circumstances of the connexion, a mere reference only can be made to it here. See in the Rauzatu's Safá, Hábíbu's Sair, and Ferishta, the passage quoted from Faríd-u'd-dín Attar. Sale's Koran, I. 23, II. 390. Hyde de Rel. Vet. Pers. p. 130. Pococke, Spec. Hist. Arab. 4, 92, 110. Bird's Guzerat, p. 39. D'Herbelot, voce Lat. Al-Makkari's Mahomedan Dynasties in Spain I. 346, and Herod. III. 6. The same fanciful and nice distinction respecting the value of single letters in these devout exclamations is also observable in the Bismillah, on which Zamakhshari in his commentary on the Koran observes, Rahmán denotes a more extensive idea than Rahím; for this reason people say in speaking of God, "the merciful (Ar-Rahmáu) in this world and the next," and "the clement (Ar-Rahím) in this world."

† The name of this place was also changed by Akbar. He called it Jalalabad, after his own name of Jalálu'ddín. That he was not above this common and venial weakness we know from his public edict abolishing the salutation of Salam 'alaykum, and substituting the Allahu Akbar, and the reply of Jalla jalálahu, in both of which we have parts of his name Jalálu'ddín Muhammad Akbar. The Sipah Salar was ordered to see that the same exclamations were made at meals; and the Aftábí, the rupee, and several other coins of his reign, as well as his seal, bore the being called Hadíábas, yet it is strange why it was not called Jhúsí in the Imperial Registers, for that town was in existence long before Akbar's time. It has frequent and honorable mention in the Treatise Fí Hálat-i-Murshid, containing an account of Sayyid Ali Murtazá's Miracles. The Sayyid died A.D. 1369, so that as the place was called Jhúsí in his days, there appears no good reason why the Parganah was not so denominated in the records of Akbar's reign.

Harbongpúr, which preceded the name of Jhúsí, is itself a comparatively modern name, for the site of Jhúsí is by common consent allowed to be the Pratishthan, or Kesi, of the Puranic Histories, the residence of the first prince of the lunar dynasty, Pururavas, the son of Budha, the son of the Moon.*—(Wilson's Introd. to Univ. Hist., p. 8; As. Res., Vol. X. p. 44; Vishnu Purana, p. 350.)

But it may be enquired, if Pratishthan is considered to have occupied the present site of Jhúsí, how could Kalidasa thus describe the position of the palace of Pururavas.

“We are there, behold it
White gleaming in the moonlight, whilst below
The Yamuna's blue waters wash its feet.”

—“Hindu Theatre,” Vol. I., p. 231.

Might not Pururavas, as the second Act of the “Hero and the Nymph” opens with a “scene in the palace at Prayaga,” have had his palace on the neck of the Doáb, and actually on the Jumna? or even on the point overlooking the confluence of the inscription آلله اكبر جَلَّ جلاله. We have several instances of Arail's being mentioned prior to Akbar's time. In the Tárikh-i-Badauní it is stated, that the Parganah of Arail was in A.H. 977 (before the composition of the Ayín-i-Akbarí) given in Jagír to Raja Ram Chand, and even before this time, we have frequent mention of it in the history of the Afghan reigns; when the place appears to have been sometimes visited by troops marching in the neighbourhood. In the last century it was celebrated as the residence of several Persian nobles, of whom there is now no trace or record, except in the ruins of the houses which they occupied.

* This is very doubtful.

Ganges and Jumna (Ibid. p. 214)? or are we suppose that in the poet's time the Jumna joined the Ganges in an earlier part of its course, and ran under the high bank on which was the hermitage of Bharadwaj, still known by his name, and the scene of the feast given by him to Bharata, the brother of Rama, together with his large army; which feast, though given by a Brahman (so little do the habits of those times consort with present Hindú notions) consisted among other luxuries, of peacocks! venison!! and pork!!! eagerly washed down with foaming bowls of spirituous liquor!!!!—(Rámáyana, Book II. section 77, p. 301.)

If we are to allow that the Jumna took that course in ancient times, it becomes another question for consideration, was the ancient Prayág on the site of the modern Allahabad, and what was there which occupied the position of the present fort?

On this subject the only materials we have are calculated to make us form different conclusions; but as even the faintest light* thrown on the origin of ancient cities is precious, they may, contradictory as they are, be not unworthy of record and observation.

When Mahmúd of Ghazní captured Asní, on the banks of the Ganges, near Fattihpúr (see extract at p. 74 of this supplement), he would not have crossed over into Bundelkhand without visiting Prayág, had there been a city there worth plundering. Again, when Muhammad Ghorí captured Benares,†

* L' oscurissima e ben sovente imperscrutabile origine delle più antiche città, prezioso rende e singolare ogni piccol lume, che negli accrediti scrittori interno a così remoti notizie ci ramaso.—(Scipione Maffei.)

† Abu'l Fazl tells us that Benares was twice visited by Sultan Mahmúd, once in A.H. 410, and again in A.H. 413; but the truth of this statement is open to considerable doubt, for not only do other historians omit all notice of these expeditions, but had not Muhammad Ghorí been the first to capture this stronghold of idolatry, he could scarcely have had a thousand temples left him to destroy, and loaded four thousand camels with the spoils.—Wilford also stated that Mahmúd captured Benares (As. Res., Vol. IX., p. 203); but Wilford's assertions are not always to be depended on.

we should have heard of his taking Prayág on his way ; but it is not even noticed by any of his historians.

And yet that there was something like a town at Prayág, before Allahabad was founded, we are authorized to believe, not only on the ground of the extreme improbability of there being no permanent residents at so important a place of pilgrimage, but because there are evidences of the present fort having been built on, and partly composed of, the ruins of some former building. This may be seen by examining the face towards the confluence, and became further evident by the discovery of Hindu sculptures and architectural remains, when a few years ago the foundation of the Jumna face was undergoing repairs. The Paṭálpúri also, enclosed within the fort, is manifestly of great antiquity, even allowing that the Akhaibar is, as is most probable, a modern fixture.* Wilson, however ("Hindu Theatre," I. 207), considers that Allahabad, or Prayaga, was not a city till Akbar made it one. That Vaisali was not the ancient Allahabad (as asserted in the "Jour. R. A. S.," No. XII. pp. 302, 325 ; and "Jour. A. S. Beng.," Vol. I. p. 4), is evident from the position assigned to it in the Chinese Travels ; and the question so warmly espoused at one time of the confluence having been the site of the famous Palibothra, may now be considered fairly set at rest, to the exclusion of Allahabad from that high honour.

After this digression on the subject of the cities which may be supposed to have been the principal scenes of his vagaries, we may now revert to Raja Harbong, and the expression which forms the subject of this article. In the traditional stories recorded of him, there appears, as in the parallel instance of Shaikh Chillí, examples both of folly and shrewdness; sometimes reminding us of the wise men of Gotham or the Tamil stories of the Guru Paramartan, at others of the ingenuity of some of the actors in the Pancha Tantra and the Greek fables of Syntipas. Many remind us of stories still current in Europe; adding another link to the chain which connects the fictitious histories, as well as languages, of Europe with those of India. But it is for injustice that the Raja is most celebrated at the present day, though it must be confessed that this appears to arise less from intentional violence than from his ignorance of jurisprudence and of the dictates of common sense.

* "The tree should be the imperishable Ber tree, which has long been famed at Allahabad, and which is still represented by a withered stem in the cave of Pátála puri underground ; but it should appear from the text that it grew in daylight, and the play probably preceded the construction of the cavern. There was, no doubt, a very ancient and venerable fig-tree at Allahabad, perhaps for some centuries, for it is alluded to in various vocabularies, as Medini, etc. ; it is also described in the 'Káshikhandá' and 'Kúrma Purána.' The first notice, however, is in the 'Rámáyana' (Bk. II., Sect. 41 and 42) ; Ráma with his wife and brother resting under the shade of it after crossing the Jumna ; so that not only was the tree in the open air, but it was on the opposite side of the river to that on which it is now traditionally venerated."—"Uttara Rama Charitra," note, p. 302.

One of the most familiar couplets expressive of the evils of his administration is—

अनधेर नगरी बेबूझ राजा

टका सेर भाजी टका सेर खाजा

“The city is in darkness, the Raja is without understanding, greens and sweetmeats are both sold at a pice a seer;” in allusion to the orders to that effect issued by the Raja of Harbongpúr, where everything, moreover, was in such disorder and confusion that the people are said to have worked by night and slept by day.

A common story of his discrimination on the judgment seat has given rise to a proverb. A man having purchased a buffalo, was leading it home, when a stranger, meeting him on the road, declared the animal was his. After much altercation they went before the Raja. The proprietor explained the circumstances of his purchase, when his accuser exclaimed, “Has your worship ever seen a man driving horned cattle without a cudgel? He has not got one, I have; it is therefore evident that the buffalo must be mine.” “True,” said the Raja, “now I reflect upon it, I have certainly observed that graziers always have a cudgel in their hand. Let it be decided, then, that the buffalo belongs to him who has the cudgel.” Hence the proverb, जिस की लाठी उस की भैंस which is now used to express the supremacy of club law.

On another occasion, a man who had purchased a buffalo-calf, demanded, after he had paid the money, something as Ghelauní, q.v. that is, something extra in kind. The seller refused, and they went before the Raja. “Assuredly,” said the Raja, “I never heard of anything being sold in the bazar without some allowance as Ghelauní. Something therefore must be given. Have you no other cattle?” “Nothing whatever,” replied the seller, “but the mother of this very calf.” “Let the mother then be given as Ghelauní,” said the Raja, “for we must not infringe old customs.” Hence the proverb, पर्या लेनी भैंस घेलाुनी “Buy the calf, and take the mother into the bargain, as a perquisite:”—something equivalent to “Give an inch and take an ell.”

These tales will serve to show the nature of Harbong ka ráj, without drawing further on the stock of similar examples of the Raja’s mal-administration. But the account of his death is too characteristic to be omitted. The great Gorakhnath and his teacher Machhander were on their travels, when they came to the kingdom of Harbong. Gorakhnath, hearing that everything, whether rare or common, was sold at the same price, determined to take up his abode in Harbongpúr, contrary to the persuasions of Machhander, who counselled retreat. They had not been there many days before a murder was committed, and gallows (?) were erected for the punishment of the culprit. But on the day appointed for the execution no criminal was forthcoming, and as the rope was very thick and strong, the Raja ordered that two of the largest men should be selected from the assembled crowd and punished on the following day. The two largest men happened to be Gorakhnath and Machhander, who after taking counsel together about their proceedings, were brought out for execution. No sooner had they reached the gallows, than they began to quarrel about precedence, each loudly pretending to desire to be strung up before the other. The Raja enquired the meaning of this singular quarrel, when Machhander stepped forward, and said he had ascertained from his books and learned Pandits, that whoever should obtain the honor of being hanged first on that day, would go immediately to Paradise. "If that is the case," said the Raja, "the fate is too good for either of you; I will swing first, if you please," and so was hanged at his own desire. These pious devotees were so shocked at his atrocities that, immediately after the execution, they made a complete bouleversement of Harbongpúr, and it remains a shapeless ruin to this day.

This is the Hindu account. The Mahomedans ascribe its destruction to a miracle effected by the Sayyid Ali Murtazá mentioned above, who died as late as A.D. 1359, and who changed the name of the place from Harbongpúr to Jhúsí.

بعد از آن دوم بار نعره یا مریخ نموده نگاه بطرف قلعه او کردند قلعه
مذکور از یخ برآورده غلطید چنانچه عمارت آن قلعه تحت برفت و
زمین بالا گردید و آن کافر مع فوج خود بجهنم شتافت و رسم اسلام
جاری گردید باقی همه هندوان از ترس این زلزله مسلمان شدند مخدوم
صاحب سید شعبان الملت استقامت کردند آخرش چند مدت آنجا
ماندند بعده پارگنگ در حویلی پیامک در موضع جرئی استقامت کردند
و چند فقرا در جهنم نسی گذاشتند *

(Manba'u's Sádát.)

* "After this having a second time cried out, 'Yá mirríkh,' he looked towards the fort which suddenly fell down and sank beneath the earth, and that infidel with his army went to hell; and the religion of Islam was introduced and all the rest of the

He is represented to have visited Jhúnsí for the purpose of introducing the Mahomedan religion amongst the infidels; but that surely must have been effected before this period, and though the story is devoutly believed by the Mahomedans, and more especially by his descendants, some of whom now hold high judicial offices under our Government, we can scarcely believe Ali Murtaẓá to be a contemporary of Raja Harbong, who, if he had any existence at all beyond the imaginations of the people, must have preceded that saint by several centuries.

Hardaur,

हरदौर

Is the name given to the oblong mounds raised in villages, and studded with flags, for the purpose of averting epidemic diseases, and especially the cholera morbus. It is called after Hardaul Lálá, the son of Bír Singh Deo, from whom are descended the Rajas of Dattea. The natives have a firm persuasion that the cholera broke out in Lord Hastings' camp, in consequence of beef having been killed for the European soldiers within the grove where repose the ashes of this Bundelkhand chief. So rapid has been the extension of this worship, that it now prevails throughout the Upper and Central Doáb, a great part of Rohilkhand, and to the banks of the Sutlej. To the Eastward, the worship of Hulká Deví (the goddess of vomiting) has been prevalent since the same period.

Harí,

हरी

Contributions of assistance by Ryots in ploughing the fields of Zamíndárs. The service is compulsory, and occurs in Asarh and Kátik.—Lower Doáb, Benares, and E. Oudh.

It is occasionally applied as Angwara, q.v.

Hindus embraced it through fear of that earthquake, and the saint lived there for some time, but subsequently crossed the Ganges to Jarai, and lived there; a few poor people remained in Jhúnsí."—B.

Harítá, هریتہ हरीता

The first commencement of ploughing in the rainy season.—Rohilkhand. In Dehli the word Halsotea is used, and elsewhere Haláitá, Harainí, Haráit, Harautá, Harwat, and Harái, q.v.

Hariyar, हरियर हरियर

This bears the same meaning in Oudh, and its immediate neighbourhood, as Kunr munḍha and Daliájhár do elsewhere, viz., the closing of the sowing season.—See these articles, and Harpújí.

Harpújí, हरपूजी हरपूजी

The worship of the plough. This takes place on the day which closes the season of ploughing and sowing. It generally occurs in the month of Kátik, but in some places it occurs both after the Kharíf and Rabi' sowings, i.e., in Sawan and Kátik. The plough is washed and decorated with garlands, and to use it or lend it after this day is deemed unlucky.

Though the plough is in some places decorated at the opening of the season (Haláitá), yet it is the more general practice to do so when its labours are closed.—See Kunr, Mundlú, and Duliájhar. Kálí Rái says, "After sowing the Kharíf and the Rabi', when they leave off ploughing, they feast the blacksmith, carpenter, potter, barber, and shoemaker, and that day they call 'nibauní.'"—E. add.

Harwal, हरवल हरवल

Advances without interest made to ploughmen.—Eastern Oudh and Benares.

Hathíle, हथिले हठीले

One of the Pachpíri, or five noted saints of the lower orders of these provinces. He is said to be the sister's son of Ghází Míyán (q.v.), and lies buried at Bahraich, near the tomb of that celebrated martyr. Monuments are erected to the memory of Hathíle (who derives his name from Hathi, an elephant, on account of his elephantine stature), and fairs are held at several villages in honor of his name.

Íkhráj,

ایکراج ईखराज

Ikhráj, or Ukhraj, is the name given in some places to the day on which sugar-cane is planted, which is generally attended with some festive ceremonies. In the Eastward it is usual for the women of the villages to take out to the field a mixture of rice and turmeric, called Aipan, into which they dip their hands, and impress them on the heap of sugar-cane which is to be planted. They then proceed towards the ploughmen and planters, and leave the same impression on their backs. The man who drives the first plough is decorated with necklaces and other ornaments, lamp-black is rubbed on his eyelids, and on him the first hatha, or impression, is made. The women then begin to dance and sing, and after a short time has elapsed, the proprietor of the field throws a bundle of sugar-cane amongst them as the signal of dismissal, and after much scrambling they depart. The labourers also are well fed by the proprietor on their return home.

In the Eastward the Ikhráj seldom occurs on a Sunday, but to the Westward that day is considered propitious for the planting. The customs which are observed are also different. In Dehli, for instance, the wife of the man at the plough, who turns up the ground for the reception of the sugar cuttings, follows a little behind with a ball of cotton in her hand. At some unexpected moment he turns on her, and after a sham contest bears her to the ground. The cotton being forced out of her hand spreads upon the ground, and the parties present exclaim, "may our sugar-cane grow and spread like this cotton."

The sugar-cane is called ईख íkh in the West, and ऊख úkh in the East, of these Provinces. Kálí Rái says the day on which they sow the seed they worship the plough with rice and turmeric, and call that day उखरहज “ukharhaj.” He says there are three kinds of sugar-cane : 1. The parvi or púrbí. 2. dusáhí (also called bastwá and karakh), sown after the kharíf is cut. 3. That which grows from the root of last year’s cane, and is called munḍha. The sugar-cane grown from cuttings is called भटमई bhaṭmaí.

Istikbál, استقبال इस्तिक्बाल

A ceremonious meeting in the open air, by advancing to receive a visitor.

Jákar, जाकर जाकड

A pledge in deposit, until goods, which are taken away, are finally approved of. This is the usual pronunciation ; but the correct word is Jankar.

It is also used in Behar to signify money deposited in a Government treasury as security, being equivalent to the more usual word ضمانت zamánat.—B.

Jíterá, जितिरा जीतेरा

Mutual assistance in tillage ; also allowing the use of a plough and bullocks, instead of paying wages in money or kind.—Rohilkhand and Bundelkhand. The word is pronounced also Jitta, and the custom is known by various other names.—See Angwara, Dangwara, and Harsot.

Jehar, जेहर जेहड

A pile of waterpots placed one on the other. The word is pronounced also Jeghar. To take the waterpots off the head of a divorced woman, is to imply consent to marry her. The custom prevails amongst the Játs, Ahírs, and Gújars, but principally amongst the former, and more commonly in Rajputana than in these provinces.

Jeorá, جیوڑا जिओडा

Perquisites of Blacksmiths, Washermen, Carpenters, and other village servants.

Júrí, جوڑی जूडी

From jorna, to join: a small bundle of sugar-cane. The tops of the Júrí, brought home on the festival of the eleventh of Katik (see Dithwan), are kept suspended from the roof of the house till the Holí, and burnt during that festival.

Jalotsarg, جلو تسرگ जलोत्सर्ग

The ceremony which is gone through when a pond, baolí, or well is married. It has been already described under Banotsarg, q.v. The only difference is that the bride is personated by an image, instead of the Tulsí. The word is derived from the Sanskrit जल water, and उत्सर्ग donation. The advantages to be derived from the ceremony are shown in the 3rd chapter of the Nirṇaya Sindhu. It is the general impression amongst Europeans that this marriage ceremony takes place only between a well and a garden, but this union is exceedingly rare; the most usual practice being, as mentioned before, to perform the marriage ceremony of each separately.

Kunr munḍlá, کنرمنڈلا कुंड मुंडला

Is the name given to the day on which the sowing is concluded.—Benares. It is in the Lower Doáb and Baiswara generally called Kunr bojí and Hariar. In the North-West it is well known by the name of Dalea-jhar, or Palea-jhar, that is, the cleaning out of the sowing bag or basket. The real meaning of Kunr mundlá is the closing of furrows, from कुंड kunr, a furrow, and मुंदना mundná, to be closed or shut. The meaning of Kunr bojí is the filling of furrows. Bojí is from बोझना to be full. This word should be written, I think, बोझी.

It is usual to devote this day to festivity, and, amongst other ceremonies, to decorate the ploughs ; and to make the residue of the seed-corn into a cake, which is partaken of in the open field, and in part distributed to Brahmans and beggars.—See Daleajhar, Hariar, and Harpújí.

Karáo,

कराऊ कराओ

The name given among Játs, Gújars, Ahírs, and other inferior tribes in the Western part of these Provinces to concubinage generally ; but more especially to marriages of widows with the brother of a deceased husband. The practice (which is also known to the Eastward by the name of Urbarí, in the Deccan of Bathí, and, in other Provinces, by the name of Dharícha) is common among these classes, but is not very openly confessed even among them, as some degree of discredit is supposed to attach to it. It is only younger brothers who form these connections, elder brothers being prohibited from marrying their younger brothers' widows ; but among the Dehli Játs even this is not prohibited. The practice has been common among several nations of the East.

When the laws of Menu were enacted Karáo appears not to have been confined to the lower classes ; but, as is not unusual with the Institutes, there is much contradiction between the enactments relating to it. From a consideration of all the passages on the subject, it appears that failure of issue was the point on which the legality turned.

“ On failure of issue by the husband, the desired offspring may be procreated by his brother, or by some other Sapinda, on the wife who has been duly authorized.”—(Ch. IX., v. 59).

The Commentator confines this licence to the servile class, and he is borne out by the passages immediately succeeding (60, 64); but the following section appears to recognize generally the lawfulness of such marriages.

“He who was begotten according to law on the wife of a man deceased, or impotent, or disordered, after due authority given to her, is called the lawful son of the wife.”—(Ch. IX., v. 176).

All the modern schools of Hindu Law prohibit the practice entirely;* and the later commentators and abridgers of the Mahábhárata show the utmost anxiety to slur over or explain away a most conspicuous case of Karáo, or worse than Karáo, recorded in that sacred poem. From the fact of Draupadí marrying the five Pándav brothers, we learn that polyandry must have prevailed amongst the heroes of that period; and if polyandry, the more venial offence of Karáo was, no doubt, not uncommon; indeed, the compiler of the Mahábhárata, Vyása, was himself appointed to raise up offspring to his deceased brother! Most of our English historians of India † take us to the Panjáb for the scene of this incestuous marriage of the Pándavs, and invite us to search for a Kampilanagar in that country, where it is not improbable that a remnant of Scythic manners might be found. But we surely need not go beyond our own Kampil on the Ganges. It seems strange that it should have been overlooked, that when the five brothers in the “Mahábhárata” proceed to all parts of Hindústan in search of allies, the first place visited by Raja Bhím, going East from Indraprasthá (Dehli), was Kampil, the capital of Raja Drupada (“Sabhá Parva,” Vol. I., p. 354, Cal. Ed.). Kampil is certainly

* It has nevertheless been admitted by the Sudder Dewany Adawlut as the lex loci of Orissa. See “Reports,” Vol. II., p. 175, the “Digest,” Vol. III., p. 276, and “MacNaghten’s Hindu Law,” Vol. I., p. 102.

† Even Marshman has fallen into this error, at p. 26 of his excellent “History of India for Schools,” under which unpretending title, he has written by far the most clear and intelligible account which we possess of the ante-Mahomedan period.

of sufficient antiquity for mention in the "Mahábhárata." It is a place, moreover, of sacred resort among the Jains, where they annually bury an image of one of their Tirthankaras, and has been immemorially established among them as a holy city. The origin of the mistake appears to be that Kampila is in Panchála, which has been considered to be the Panjáb; whereas it is the name of an old country on the banks of the Ganges, including Farrakhabad and Southern Rohilkhand.

This practice must have prevailed even before the time of the Páṇḍavs, for Yudhishtira replies to the expostulations of King Drupada, "We pretend not to determine what is proper: we follow the path successively trodden by those who have gone before." There is, perhaps, no circumstance which so strongly shews the Northern descent of the deified heroes as this marriage. Herodotus tells us that the practice prevailed among the nomadic Scythians, as it does at present among the Bhotias. The practice is adopted also by the Nairs of Malabar, between whom and the people of the Himalaya Wilson traces the obscure vestiges of a connection (See "Selections from the Mahábhárata," pp. 8 and 66).

Amongst Játs, Gújars, and Ahírs, children born in Karáo are considered legitimate, and are entitled to inheritance accordingly. Children brought forth by the woman previous to Karáo, except in the case of fraternal Karáo, are known by the name of Kadhelara कधेलडा, and do not inherit the property of the father-in-law.

Khoj,

کھوج खोज

* * Literally, tracking. This term is applied to an elaborate system prevalent in the Panjáb, and in certain parts of these provinces where the crime of cattle-lifting is very frequent. The foot-prints of thieves, and the hoof-prints of cattle, are tracked by a class of men called khojis, whose skill is very extraordinary. Such men are met with in nearly every village, and having once struck the track, will carry it on for miles, over all sorts of country, and nearly always succeed in finding the cattle. The chief difficulty which a khoji has to encounter in the course of his tracking is when he comes to the entrance of a village. In the Panjáb, and the Upper or Western parts of these Provinces, the villages consist usually of clusters of houses huddled close together on a mound, and having only very narrow lanes between them. In many districts, especially in the Cis-Satlaj provinces, or the country between the Jumna and the Satlaj, where the incessant broils carried on by the petty chieftains of that district among themselves have long rendered life and property insecure, the villages are surrounded by a wall, and have only one large and strongly defended gateway, in whose deep recesses the patriarchs of the community meet to smoke their evening hukka, and watch the cattle coming home. It is obvious that the mass of cattle all entering at one gate, or even at two or more, must leave a multiplicity of footprints, amongst which the track of one particular animal is indistinguishable. The cattle-thief is well aware of this, and leads his booty home through as many villages as he can on purpose to baffle his pursuers; by doing so, however, he exposes himself to the danger of being seen and recognized by many people, questioned about his cattle and himself, and if the village chokidár, or watchman, be on the alert, of being seized and detained. This danger, however, is less in reality than it sounds, because the thief can in a great many, perhaps the majority of cases, count upon the sympathy and silence of the villagers. Inasmuch, however, as without connivance on the part of the people through whose villages he passes, the thief could not well escape detection and detention, a system sprung up under native rule, which was for some time, and I believe still is, allowed to remain in operation under the British administration. It is this:—if on following up a track the khoji and his witnesses can bring it into the mass of hoof-prints immediately surrounding a village, he carefully covers the last mark over with a potsherd, or leaves some one to watch it, and going into the village summons the lumberdars, or headmen, and calls on them to "pahuncháo," or carry on the track beyond the limits of the lands belonging to their village. If they, with the assistance of their own khoji, are unable to do so, they are considered responsible for the stolen property, and have either to produce it or pay the price of it in money.

In the Barr, or desert, through which the five rivers of the Panjáb flow for many miles of their lower course, the soil is often a hard caked sand, which does not retain the impress of the foot, and in those parts it is only by making the most of such foot-prints as he can find in the patches of soft sand which occur here and there that the khoji can follow his game. The patience and ingenuity, and the marvellous keenness of sight, which a good tracker displays, are equal to anything that has been recorded of the red men of North, or the gauchos of South America. Out of many anecdotes current on this interesting subject I select two, one of which fell within my own observation. A camel was stolen from the market-place of Multan, a locality where thousands of these animals, coming from all the neighbouring countries, are assembled. This particular camel, like many others, had been branded on the soft spongy soles of his feet with his owner's private mark. The brand was shown to a khoji, who, after making a careful circuit of some miles round the city, found foot-prints with this mark leading northwards. Mounted on another camel he took up the track, and followed it for more than two hundred miles, till he reached Gujrá't, a town only thirty miles from the foot of the Kashmír hills. Here the country becomes fertile, and is extensively cultivated, and for a time he lost the track, and applied to me in consequence for assistance. Another khoji was associated with him, and the two together found the track again, and, accompanied by the owner of the camel, found the beast at last in the market-place of a little town in the Kashmír territory, close under the hills, whence they brought it back in triumph to Gujrát.

In another case a buffalo was stolen from the neighbourhood of Ferozpúr. The thief took it to the Satlaj, which he crossed, swimming and holding on by the animal's tail. The khoji followed the track to the banks of the river, which at that place is nearly two miles broad; on the other side was the vast sandy plain of the Barr, where hundreds and thousands of buffaloes graze. The khoji calculated so accurately the force of the current and its effect in carrying a swimmer along with it, that without any hesitation he crossed and landed on the other side exactly at the spot where the thief had come out, and after carrying the track a little further, found both man and animal.

In tracking human foot-prints the khoji is sometimes aided by three little straws, with which he measures the length of the foot, its breadth at the ball and at the heel; but many of the best khojis disdain any such mechanical aid, and trust solely to their eye.—B.

Panch, پنچ पंच

Pancháyat, پنچایت पंचायत

* * * The rustic tribunal known by these names is one the origin of which is lost in antiquity, and whose popularity has remained unimpaired through the ages. पंच में परमेश्वर “In the panch is God,” is a common saying in India. In its strictest acceptation the panch consists, as its name implies, of five persons, who ought to be residents of the same village, or of the same caste and rank in life as the parties concerned; but this number in modern times is seldom adhered to: three is the smallest number of which it can be constituted, and it may consist of as many as fifty or a hundred. This irregularity arises from the fact that the panch has, and probably has always had, two distinct characters, according to the functions it is called on to discharge. First and most important is the judicial panch. This generally consists of five only, and not less or more. In the Panjáb, and, I believe, in the non-regulation districts generally, previous to the introduction of the Indian Penal Code (Act XLV. of 1861), the institution of the panch was utilized to a great extent by the district officers in the trial of civil, criminal, and revenue suits, and its decisions were always acquiesced in cheerfully, and, except in cases where unfairness had been practised, never appealed from. The procedure was for the plaintiff to name two men, and the defendant two, either party having, as in the case of a jury in England, the right of challenging the other's nominees. The magistrate or other presiding officer then chose a head, or sar panch; the point in dispute was clearly stated to the panch, all the necessary papers were handed over to them, and they were sworn to decide fairly and honestly, and to return a judgment in a certain number of days. The particular value of this mode of trial was that in intricate points of native customs, often depending upon a state of feeling which it was difficult for the English officer, as being a foreigner, to enter into, the members of the panch were thoroughly at home in their subject, and were able to give due weight to a variety of minor considerations which none but a native could perfectly understand. Even in the older provinces, where the regulations are in force, it is found at times convenient to have recourse to this time-honoured method of decision, and the result is always so satisfactory, that one is tempted to wish it were more largely resorted to.

There are some cases, such, for instance, as those relating to the peculiar customs of the Kashmiri shawl-weavers in the Panjáb, which can only be settled by a pancháyat composed of members of the fraternity. Such also are questions connected with partitions of estates, or the assessment of lands for revenue purposes; or those, again, in which damages have to be awarded for breaches of contract; or settlements of accounts between a peasant and his money-lender, where the panch, from being residents of the same village as the parties, can bring their local knowledge to bear on points which could not well be decided by a judicial officer, from the total want of reliable evidence as to minute credits and debits running on through a long series of years. Moreover, the influence of the elders of the village is often strong enough to induce one or both of the contending parties to yield certain points in order to obtain a settlement, or even to forgive the injury which has been the origin of the case.

Different from this judicial panch, is that self-constituted court whose edicts owe their validity to the force of public opinion; and these are often very terrible tribunals indeed. The questions they are most often called upon to decide are matters connected with the great institution of caste. As a rule a man can only be put out of caste, or received back into it, by a pancháyat of his caste-brethren, and, especially in Behar and Bengal, such pancháyats consist often of very large numbers of persons. A case which I remember in Purneah illustrates the operation of this caste-panch fully. A man of a low caste, as far as I recollect, a dhobi, or washerman, was suspected of living in illicit intercourse with his aunt. He denied it, but refused to remove the woman from his house, and some time afterwards went and was openly married to her. None of his caste-fellows attended the marriage feast, as the woman was with child, as was supposed, by this man. Public opinion ran strong against the pair, and at last the whole of his caste in the parganah, amounting to some hundreds, met and elected a numerous pancháyat, who, after carefully taking and recording a mass of evidence, solemnly found both parties guilty, and put them out of caste. A singular letter was then written in a rude Hindi scrawl, to which the members of the pancháyat affixed their marks or names, and this was sent round from hand-to-hand through a large circle of country, comprising three or four districts, informing all whom it might concern, that so-and-so, having been judged guilty of conduct immoral in itself and opposed to the practices of the caste, had been deprived of his rights, and that no one was thenceforth to eat, drink, or smoke with him on pain of sharing his fate. The wretched man, after bearing his sentence for some weeks, finding his life intolerable, and all the neighbouring country closed to him, at first contemplated turning Musulman, but eventually gave in, was separated from his wife, and made submission; he was then directed to give a feast, at which all the fraternity attended and ate with him, whereupon he was re-installed in his caste.

But the pancháyat, though a singularly just tribunal, and displaying generally a sound common sense, is of course not infallible, and it sometimes occurs that bribery or other corrupt practices are resorted to. From the general uncertainty prevailing as to the way such tribunals, when not summoned or charged by a magistrate, proceed to arrive at their decision, it has been in practice found unadvisable to endorse or uphold their judgments, and taking into consideration the immense increase of material wealth in the Lower Provinces, and the important interests at stake, it must be admitted that the system is not so applicable to that part of the country as it is to the rude and simple peasantry of the Panjáb. It is probably destined to be swept away, or at least to be retained only among the people themselves in such cases as are not susceptible of rigorous legal investigation before the constituted tribunals.—B.

APPENDIX C.

PREVALENT CASTES IN THE NORTH-WESTERN PROVINCES, AS DESCRIBED IN THE CENSUS REPORT (1865), VOL. I.

The subsequent pages (283-92) have been taken from Mr. W. C. Plowden's Digest of the Census, §§ 230-310. For the statements contained in the extracts that follow (marked in the original as Appendix B.) the several District Officers must be held responsible whose names are appended:—

The classification of castes in the general statement is a singular table. There are no less than 560 castes shown among the Hindus, and there are fourteen other columns, raising the total number to 574, embracing Bengalís, Madrasís, Thibetans, Chinese, Parsís, Mahomedans, and Christians.

The four great primary castes of Hindus are thus sub-divided:—Brahmans into 70 sub-divisions, Kshatriyas into 175, Vaisyas into 65, Súdras into 230. Then come five columns—one comprising Sikhs, four comprising different sects of the Jain religion; then fourteen columns relating to religious sects—Gosains, Jogís, Sannyásís, and the like. Finally, three columns relate to travellers, and one to Hindus whose caste is not known.

The Brahmans are 3,451,692 in number; the Kshatriyas amount to 2,827,768; the Vaisyas are much less in number, namely, 1,091,250. The Súdras form the great bulk of the population, counting 18,304,309 individuals. Then come 12,336 persons whose caste was unknown. Only 1,425 Sikhs are shown; but it must be remembered that the Statement of Castes does not embrace military or persons employed on the railway. According to the present composition of the native army, we should expect to find a large number of Sikhs classed among military; and there is no doubt that Sikhs form a considerable portion of the native troops stationed in these Provinces; but the information received from the several Brigade Majors and Cantonment Magistrates is not complete on this head—the troops merely being shown in several cases according as they are Hindus or Mahomedans, without any reference to the castes of the former.

Going on with the statement, we find 49,983 of the Jain sect, and 195,977 of other religious sects—Gosains, Fakírs, Sannyásís, etc.; 1,348 persons are returned as Bengalís, 26 as Madrassís, 67 as Thibetans, 37 as Chinese (of whom 36 are to be found in the districts where tea-planting is going on, and one is at Allahabad); 76 Parsís are entered as residing at Ajmír, but no specimens of this enterprising race are to be found in any other part of the North-West.

Of the Mahomedans, 2,207,576 have not been classified at all; of the remainder, 1,140,108 are Shaikhs, 515,526 are Patháns, 170,248 are Sayyids, and 41,748 are described as Mughals.

Of the sub-divisions of the four great castes, we find the following prevalent :—

Among the Brahmans, excluding 1,198,216 who have returned themselves merely as Brahmans, without reference to sub-divisions of castes, the sub-divisions mentioned below are most numerous, and prevail most largely in the districts named :—

Names of Sub-divisions.	Total Number.	District where most prevalent.	Number.
1. Kanaujia	506,888	Cawnpore	235,805
2. Tewarí	213,565	Gorakhpúr	62,250
3. Gaur	170,182	Saháranpúr	46,948
4. Pandey	167,735		67,513
5. Sanauria	163,993	Muttra	90,287
6. Missir	150,231	Gorakhpúr	41,835
7. Dúbey	132,612	Ditto	34,826
8. Taggah	105,035	Mírat	46,603
Total	1,610,241		626,067

The Kanaujias are not found in any number above Etawah; in fact, in the Mírat Division they are not known, and in Rohilkhand they number little more than 1,000—a small colony of 998 existing in Moradabad, and 16 persons of the same sub-division being recorded as residents of Bijnore.

Almost half the Gaur Brahmans belong to Muzaffarnagar and Saháranpúr. There are large numbers also of this sub-division in Moradabad and Muttra.

The Tewaris belong almost entirely to the Gorakhpúr and Benares Divisions. Allahabad and Banda, however, contain 68,000.

The Chaubeys are met with in greatest numbers at Mirzapúr, Benares, Gorakhpúr, and are not to be found above Muttra.

The Dúbeys also belong to the south of the Province; and the Pandes (a name not unfamiliar to English ears, for, owing to the first of the Sepoy mutineers belonging to this caste, the name was not uncommonly applied to designate all sepoy mutineers) are likewise found almost exclusively below the Mírat and Rohilkhand Divisions.

Seven-eighths of the Sanauria Brahmans belong to the Muttra and Agra districts; while the Tagghahs, on the other hand, are found exclusively in Saháranpúr, Muzaffarnagar, Bijnore, Mírat, and Moradabad—a cluster of adjoining districts forming the extreme north-west of this Province. The smallest class among the Brahmans is the Dhatúrah sub-ject, which consists of nine individuals living in the Allahabad district.

Turning now to the great military family of the Kshatriyas, with their 175 divisions, we find twelve-fourteenths (1,282,454) classified as Chhatrí Thákurs, Kúer or Rajputs. Saháranpúr contains 230,118, and Ghazipur 206,262, of their total number; but they are found in large numbers throughout the Province.

The sub-divisions, comprising the largest numbers, and the districts in which they are prevalent, will be seen in the accompanying abstract:—

Names of Sub-divisions.	Total Number.	District where most prevalent.	Number.
1. Khassia	204,190	Kamaon.....	204,190
2. Bais	146,953	Jaunpúr.....	35,536
3. Chauhán	118,714	Bijnore	71,685
4. Gautam	66,633	Mirzapúr	18,178
5. Bhoimhar.....	55,500	Azimgarh	47,926
6. Gaur.....	53,937	Muttra	22,460
7. Khatrí.....	46,332	{ Widely scattered through- out the Province.

The Khassias are peculiar to the Kamáon hills. The sequel contains a brief account of them, vide the Memorandum of Castes for the district of Kamáon.

With the exception of 5,912 in Farrakhabad, the Bais clan is confined entirely to the Allahabad, Benares, and Gorakhpúr Divisions, that of Allahabad containing the greatest number.

The Chauháns are found in nineteen districts, but in large numbers only in Bijnore and Etawah. Three-fifths almost of the whole are found in the former district, and 15,000 in Etawah.

The Gautams belong to the Allahabad, Gorakhpúr, and Benares Divisions.

The Bhoimhar caste is met with only in Azimgarh, Jaunpúr, and Mirzapúr, the bulk of the tribe belonging to Azimgarh.

The Gaur tribe is found mostly in Muttra and Cawnpore.

Khattrís are to be met with in all but five districts, but are not found in large numbers in any one district. The greatest number, 8,457, is found in Cawnpore.

Of the Mansal and Mallú Kshatriyas severally, only one representative appears, and in both cases in Agra.

Of the Vaisyas, or mercantile class, 383,202 are recorded as Banniahs. 232,862 are classed as Agarwals, of whom the largest number (68,661) are entered in the Mírat return.

Of the remainder, the following classes are most largely represented :—

Names of Sub-divisions.	Total Number.	District where most prevalent.	Number.
1. Kandú	72,149	Ghazipur	38,005
2. Umar	55,827	Mirzapúr	16,693
3. Kasserwaní	49,528	Allahabad	31,763
4. Kassondhan	31,782	Gorakhpúr	21,832
5. Mahajan	31,691	Etawah	13,529
6. Agrehrí	29,874	Jaunpúr.....	6,514
7. Baranwal	20,328	Azimgarh	6,293
8. Dúsar	15,429	Cawnpore	15,254

With the exception of 175 in Hamírpúr, the Dúsars are recorded only in Cawnpore; the Kandús in Ghazipur and Gorakhpúr; the Baran-wals, with the exception of 2,428 in the Moradabad District, are found only in Gorakhpúr, Azimgarh, Jaunpúr, and Ghazipur; the Mahajans principally in Etawah and Etah; the Kassondhans in Gorakhpúr; the Kasserwanís in Allahabad; the Agrehris in the districts below Cawnpore, and the Umars in Mirzapúr, Cawnpore, Farrakhabad, and Jaunpúr.

The Agarwals and the Banniahs, who have been recorded without subordinate distinctions of tribe, are found in all districts throughout the Province.

Proceeding now to the lowest of the four great castes, we find among the Súdras, exclusive of those whose castes are designated by their profession, that the following sub-divisions are conspicuous by their numbers: the districts in which they are most numerous are also shown:—

Names of Sub-divisions.	Total Number.	District where most prevalent.	Number.
Ahír	2,196,786	Gorakhpúr	483,903
Kayasth	351,463	Ditto	39,689
Máli	167,597	Bijnore	42,736
Nái	430,564	Gorakhpúr	55,508
Kumhár	453,614	Ditto	61,646
Dhímar or Kahár	693,519	Ditto	67,426
Kúrmí	971,285	{ Bareilly	163,232
Gadariyá	566,981	{ Gorakhpúr	242,388
Lodhá	585,932	Cawnpore	40,200
Kalál	262,884	Hamírpur	59,864
Káchhí	1,348,316	Gorakhpúr	46,739
Kolí	444,992	Ditto	163,839
Pasí	272,151	Agra	36,457
Chamár	3,580,385	Allahabad	82,345
Gújar	264,496	Gorakhpúr	412,600
Ját	682,712	Mirat	54,035
Mallah	388,258	Muttra	120,494
Kisan	335,305	Gorakhpúr	134,652
		Bareilly	105,506

Among the remaining Súdras the following are noticeable:—

Mhair	50,570	Khassiah	107,648
Kol	62,463	Nat	25,095
Gond	48,430	Kanjar	15,236
Thag	2	Sansia	116
Dom	51,199	Bhar	233,373
Chauhán Chaudrí	37,313	Bind	63,501

The Kayeths, or Kayaths, are found throughout the Province, with the single exception of the Garhwal District. In Kamáon, however, they are very few in number, only 25 being found there; and these it may be considered are emigrants from the plains who have settled at Nainí Tál, or in some of the Government offices in the hills.

The Ahírs, too, are numerous throughout the plain districts, and Muzaffarnagar is the only one in which they do not appear in force. The Kachhís, who are admirable cultivators, are found throughout all the divisions of the North-West proper, i.e., excluding the mountains and the Ajmír Division. In Mírat, however, they are few, and are found only in one district of that division in anything like numbers. In the Mírat District they amount to 27,418, and in Bulandshahr to 2,421. They do not appear in the other districts of the division. The Kolís and Jaláhas are found in all the plain divisions except Gorakhpúr; but in the Benares Division, where little cotton is produced, they dwindle down to less than 1,200.

The Bhars, supposed by some to be aborigines, are found in the extreme east of the Province. With the exception of 2,377 in the Allahabad District, they are confined to Gorakhpúr and the districts of the Benares Division.

The Pásís, too, belong to the south-east: a few are found in Mírat, and nearly an eighth of their whole number in Shahjehanpúr, Bareilly, and Moradabad.

Chamárs are to be met with in all the districts of the Province, hill or otherwise.

The Gújars belong principally to the north and north-western districts; three-fifths of them reside in the Mírat Division, and 32,270 are entered against Ajmír. Játs are found in all but four districts, but not in large numbers south or east of Agra. More than a quarter of their number are residents of Muttra and Agra, and nearly a half of the whole is found in the Mírat Division, where they amount in round numbers to 330,000.

The wandering tribes, Nats and Kanjars, are, as might be predicted, to be met with in most districts; they appear in thirty out of thirty-five cases.

The Mallahs have evidently been incorrectly distinguished, as none are found in many districts bordering the Ganges and the Jumna, where they notoriously exist.

The Khassiah Súdras are, like their Rajput brethren, peculiar to the hills. In Garhwál they number 107,627, and 21 are found in the Tarai immediately below the hills.

The greater number of the Doms appear to reside in Garhwál. It is probable they are included in other cases with Methars and Khakrobs.

Bijnore has the distinction of giving a home to the two Thags recorded as residents of the North-West.

The Chauhán Chaudrís, entered as a Súdra caste, belong exclusively to Moradabad.

The four districts of Bareilly, Shahjahanpúr, Farrakhabad, and Mainpúri contain ten-elevenths of the whole Kisan class: 344 of this class are found in Moradabad, 1,693 in the Tarai, and the remaining 11,966 in Etah.

The Gonds, an indigenous tribe, are found almost exclusively in Gorakhpúr, Benares, and Mirzapúr. There are also a few in Allahabad, and a few scattered throughout the Jhansi Division.

The Kols, a somewhat similar race, are found principally in Allahabad and Mirzapúr, which two districts contain 52,275. The remaining 10,188 are residents of Banda.

The Mhairs belong exclusively to Mhairwara, in the Ajmír Division.

Of the Jain religionists, numbering 49,983, by far the larger number belong to Ajmír, where they amount to 23,795; but Muzaffarnagar contains 9,354 Saráogís, and Lallatpúr 11,264 Jains. The remainder are scattered in small bodies, principally in Agra, Farrakhabad, Etawah, Allahabad, and Mirzapúr.

The Gosains muster strongest in Mírat, Muttra, and Bulandshahr; the Jogís in Moradabad, Aligarh, Agra, and Cawnpore. The Sannyásís are peculiar to Garhwál, and the same may be said of the Dúm Jogís. The Jangan and Nanakshahí sects are peculiar to Benares; the Atíth to Azimgarh. Nearly half of the Fakírs enumerated are found in Allahabad and Gorakhpúr, while the Ladhú, Bhartí, and Bankhatta classes are to be met with only in Benares.

The accompanying statement shews the percentage of each of the four great castes on the total Hindu population of each district:—

STATEMENT OF DISTRICTS, SHEWING THE COMPOSITION OF THE HINDU POPULATION IN REGARD TO THE FOUR GREAT CASTES.

Names of Districts.	Percentage of Brahmans on total Hindus.	Percentage of Kshatriyas on total Hindus.	Percentage of Vaisyas on total Hindus.	Percentage of Sūdras on total Hindus.
Dehra Dūn	10·05	32·58	2·84	54·53
Sahāranpūr	11·55	41·03	7·19	40·23
Muzaffarnagar	12·88	5·42	8·03	73·67
Mirat	17·47	7·16	7·57	67·80
Bulandshahr ..	14·30	11·99	4·97	68·74
Aligarh	16·44	8·45	6·81	68·30
Kamāon	17·22	76·73	1·12	4·93
Garhwāl	22·67	11·78	0·47	65·08
Bijnore	8 34	15·45	3·74	72·47
Moradabad	8 25	4·60	4·59	82·56
Badāon	8·09	9 29	3·42	79 20
Bareilly	6·79	4·12	2 83	86·26
Shahjahanpūr	7·89	8·01	1·85	82·25
Tarai Parganahs.....	7·15	5·81	·97	86·07
Muttra.....	20·12	14·60	7·11	58·17
Agra	15·44	10·64	6·96	66·96
Farrakhabad	11·27	8·77	1·63	78·33
Mainpuri.....	10·29	8 45	5·22	76·04
Etawah	16 22	9·	5·62	69·16
Etah	10·24	9·66	5·25	74·85
Jhansi	14·78	5·70	4·30	75·22
Jalaun	16·85	12·03	5·46	65·66
Lallatpūr	9 59	6 46	5·16	78·79
Cawnpore	22·27	11·45	3·90	62·38
Fattihpūr	13 98	8·99	3·96	73 07
Banda	16·79	9·50	3·99	69·72
Allahabad	15·10	4·71	4·13	76 06
Hamirpūr	13·19	9·06	3·95	73 80
Gorakhpūr	12·79	4·11	4 06	79 04
Azimgarh	8·43	14·27	1·19	76·11
Jaunpūr	19 34	24·50	3·11	53·05
Mirzapūr	13 87	10·10	4·50	71·53
Benares	15·25	8·07	2·67	74 01
Ghazipur	10·13	16·90	3·97	69 0
Ajmir	6·47	4·90	9 31	79·32

The Statement of Castes may be accepted as correct in so far as it classifies the primary castes; but the details of the sub-castes are only approximately correct, as it is evident from the tables that in some cases no distinction of subordinate caste has been observed.

There is but one other portion of the papers included in the Census Report which still requires remark. I refer to Appendix B., containing the replies of the several District Officers in regard to the castes prevailing in their respective districts, and the mode in which the subsidiary castes have taken their origin. This is a subject on which I am not in a position to add any information. Babú Siva Prasad, Joint Inspector of Schools in the Benares Circle, who is well acquainted with the subject, has, however, been good enough to furnish the following comments on this Appendix :—

“Appendix B. contains much valuable and interesting information, though mixed up with much that is worthless, badly arranged, and sometimes contradictory. The reader will often find the statement that Aheer (Ahír) is derived from ahi, a snake, and heer, love. He will meet with such glaring errors as the following :—

“‘Doms came from Arabia.’—(Page 4, line last.)

“‘Suraogees take their names from Jeynee, a woman who married one Rigdeojee, a Chuttree. This man became a hermit. Zeenuth was his first disciple.’—(Page 26, line 29.)

“‘The Cashmeree Pundits, who attempt to pass themselves off as an offshoot of the Brahmin class, are in reality Kaeths.’—(Page 51, line 3.)

“‘Mahajuns.—These are the illegitimate children of a man called Jin, hence called Mahajin, which in course of time became corrupted into Mahajun.’—(Page 52, line 19.)

“‘They are said to have descended from Maicasur, a demon.’—(Page 95, line 28.)

“‘Gharwars.—This race call themselves descendants of Bindar, of the Lunar race. They originated in Rewah. Akbar of Dehli was born at the house of some Rewah Chuttree; he therefore called Rewah his ghur (house), and hence the derivation of the name Ghurwar.’—(Page 115, line 5.)

“To anybody with a slight acquaintance with Sanskrit it will be evident that Ahír is a corruption of abhíra (cow-herd), as mentioned in page 70, line 38.

“It is not probable that Doms, who are generally considered to belong to the aborigines of India, could have come from Arabia.

“‘Suraogee is a corruption of srávaka, meaning the lay votary of a Buddha or Jina.’—(Wilson.)

“‘Jeynee (Jaini) is derived from Jina, the generic name of the personage peculiar to the Jaina sect, who is ranked by them as superior to the gods of the other sects.'—(Wilson.)

“ ‘Rigdeojee (Rishabha Deva) is the first of the twenty-four principal jinas or Jaina saints.’—(Wilson.) His first disciple was Pandarik, and not Zeenath. The latter (really Zinat) can only be the name of a Mahomedan, and is commonly met with among the occupants of the Mahomedan zenanas—e.g., Zinat-ool-Nissa. These few remarks show how absurd is the derivation which has been assigned for the term Suraogee.”

The Babú adds: “There is no reason to suppose the Cashmeree Pundits are in reality Kaeths; that Mahajun (Maha-jun) simply means ‘great man,’ and is applied to bankers of all castes, like its synonym, Seth, which is a corruption of shrishti, meaning pre-eminent and president. It is a great mistake to connect the word Mahajun with Jina (the god) or Maicasur (Mayasur, a demon).

“If by ‘Akbar of Dehli’ is meant Akbar the Great, of Agra, everybody conversant with history knows that he was born in Amarkot (Sindh), and not in Rewah; while Binár (not Bindar) was the famous Rajah of Benares said to be a Goharvor. Whatever may be the origin of the term, it has nothing to do with ghur.”

The Babú pronounces the Memorandum by Kaur Lachman Singh, of Bijnore, to be by far the best; and he remarks that the note from Moradabad contains much interesting matter, as also does that for Etawah.

The names “Chamachhe and Ujeg Chand” in the Memorandum from Mírat and Bulandshahr (page 12, line 18; and page 15, line 23) are errors: they should be Rajahs Janmejaj and Jaichand.

DEHRA DUN.

In very early ages Rajputs and Brahmans from the plains settled in Garhwál. The Rajputs intermarried with a race known as Kassies (a hill race of very low caste), and thus themselves lost caste, but continued to call themselves Rajputs. When the Rajah of Garhwál wished to people the Dún, he brought these men down from Garhwál. Though they called themselves Rajputs, they were not acknowledged by their brethren of the plains, and could not (and cannot now) intermarry with them. The better class of these gradually took the titles of Ráwat, Bisht Negí, and Karaulí, and the inferior classes (the dependants who came with them) were called Rauleor. The families of Rajputs who from time to time have come from the plains and intermarried with the Dún Rajputs have lost caste, and there are only ten or twelve houses of Rajputs who intermarry with families in the plains.*

The Brahmans who settled in Garhwál soon lost sight of the obligations of caste, and intermarried with the Rajputs and with the hill tribes, and they adopted to a great extent the customs of the Rajputs. They separated into smaller castes, such as Notal, Matana, Dabál, Dangwal, Bhangána, Otal, Kukraití. The two chief sub-divisions of castes were the Seraulí and Gangrárí. The Gangrárí will eat bread from the hand of a Seraulí; but the Seraulís will only eat from the hands of one of their own caste, and not from one of their own caste who has married a Gangrárí. These Brahmans came from Garhwál to the Dún with the Hill Rajputs. The Gaur Brahmans came direct from the plains, and still keep their purity of caste, and marry only with Brahmans from the plains. Of this class is Jowála, Brahman of Raepúr, and his family.

These latter (the Gaur Brahmans) are recent immigrants. But the Seraulí and Gangrárí Brahmans are old inhabitants.

The Baniahs and Mahájans, who originally came from the plains, have in many cases intermarried with the Hill Rajputs, and have thus lost caste. Their descendants are called Ghatta Baniahs.

The lower castes, such as Carpenters, Chamárs, etc., are supposed to have been imported by the Maharaja of Garhwál from the plains.†

* In the Dún at the present time there are families of Rajputs who have comparatively recently come from the plains, and who still keep up their connection by marriage, etc., with the parent stock. These families will not eat or intermarry with the original Dún and Hill Rajputs.

† The mass of all the lower castes, such as Chamárs, Káhárs, etc., have probably come to the Dún as cultivation has been extended, and also in consequence of the great influx of Europeans to the Dún. These have brought in their train domestic servants and farm labourers, who have gradually settled in the Dún. But, besides these, there

Besides the above-mentioned castes, there are a few Udásí Fakírs, who came to the Dún from the Panjáb with Guru Rám Ráo.

The origin of the Mehras in the Eastern Dún is not well known. They are supposed to correspond to the Bokhsars of Rohilkhand, and are believed to be the degenerate offspring of Káhárs and Banjáras.

SOBA RAM, Kánúngí.

SAHARANPUR.

The following table gives some information regarding the different castes inhabiting the district:—

“The district seems to have been first generally inhabited about the year 1300 A.D., and, with the exception of this universally acknowledged date amongst the natives, all seems to be enveloped in mist and uncertainty.”

HISTORY OF CASTES IN ZILLAH SAHARANPUR.

Numbers.	Caste.	Remarks.
1	Brahman	The Gaur Brahmans came from Bengal, the Gujrati Brahmans from Gujrát, and other Brahmans from the vicinity of Kanaúj, from 1300 to 1400 A.D.
2	Baniah	The Aggarwal, etc., came from Agroah, beyond Hisár, about 1400 A.D.
3	Dhúsar	The Dhúsar Baniahs came from Rewarí, in Gúrgáon, about 1840 A.D.
4	Rajput, Hindú	The Hindú Rajputs came from Oudh about 1400 A.D.
5	Khatri	This caste came from Peshawar and Múltán, in the Panjáb, about 1500 A.D.
6	Kaith.....	Came from Bhatnair, Zillah Sirsah, and other parts of the North-Western Provinces, from 1300 to 1500 A.D.
7	Sayyid	Came from Arabia originally, and have been in Saháranpúr since it was inhabited, about 1300 A.D.
8	Shaikh	Ditto ditto ditto.
9	Pathán	Ditto ditto ditto.
10	Kamloh.....	Came from Kamudnagar, and have located themselves in Saháranpúr for the past 300 years.
11	Raen, Hindú.....	Came to Saháranpúr from the Gur Gazní and Sirsawal, in Afghanistan, about 1650 A.D.

is a large floating population of the lower classes, who depend for their livelihood on domestic service, or come as Bildárs to the tea plantation, and who, when it suits their purpose, go away and are replaced by others.

Numbers.	Caste.	Remarks.
12	Bilúch	Came from Bilúchistan about 1400 A.D.
13	Ját	Ditto Sirsapathan, in the Dekkan, about 1600 A.D.
14	Ahír	Ditto Muttra and Riware, and have been in Saháranpúr since first inhabited, about 1300 A.D.
15	Thattra, { Hindú	Ditto Múltán, in the Panjáb, 250 years since.
	{ Musulman.. }
16	Kalal, Hindú	Ditto Panjáb, about 1400 A.D.
17	Ditto, Musulman	Ditto Dehli, about 1750 A.D.
18	Khojah	Ditto Hírat, 200 years since.
19	Kamangar	Ditto Arabia, 300 ditto.
20	Tírgar	Ditto Persia, 500 ditto.
21	Máchie	Ditto Arabia, 500 ditto.
22	Mihmar	Ditto Ditto, 400 ditto.
23	Mamári	Ditto Ditto, 550 ditto.
24	Juláha	Ditto Ditto, 550 ditto.
25	Lohar, Musulman.....	Not known where they came from, but have been in Saháranpúr 400 years.
26	Badhie, Musulman ...	Came from Múltán, in the Panjáb, 200 years since.
27	Pherai	Ditto Khelat, 550 ditto.
28	Bissati	Ditto Kirana, in Zillah Muzaffarnagar, 200 ditto.
29	Banjára	Ditto the Lower Provinces, 400 ditto.
30	Sabúngar	Ditto Dehli, 400 ditto.
31	Kágazi	Ditto Arabia, 500 ditto.
32	Kangígá	Ditto Múltán, in the Panjáb, 550 ditto.
33	Garah	Ditto all parts of the country, ditto.
34	Darzie	Ditto ditto ditto.
35	Kassie	Ditto Arabia, 500 years since.
36	Khúmra	Ditto the Lower Provinces, 100 ditto.
37	Hajjam	Ditto the Panjáb, 550 ditto.
38	Bhistí	Ditto the Lower Provinces, ditto.
39	Dhobí	Ditto Jodhpúr, ditto
40	Tehlie	Ditto Múltán, 400 ditto.
41	Khairaddí	Ditto Bengal, 500 ditto.
42	Atasbaz	Ditto Arabia, 550 ditto.
43	Tabbak	Ditto Dehli, ditto.
44	Bhattiára	Ditto Turkey, 500 ditto.
45	Sekalgarh	Not known where they came from.
46	Mallie (Musulman) ...	Came from Dehli, 200 years since.
47	Gagra	Ditto Jíndh, etc., 550 ditto.
48	Rangrez	Ditto Múltán, in the Panjáb, 550 ditto.
49	Ghosf	Ditto Khelat, 550 ditto.
50	Bildar	Ditto Panjáb, 80 ditto.
51	Fakír	Ditto all parts of the country.
52	Mirdah	Ditto Oudh, 550 years since.
53	Súnar	Ditto Dehli, 500 ditto.
54	Bansphor	Natives of Saháranpúr, etc., took this appellation 150 do.
55	Chauhán	Came from Oudh, 500 ditto.
56	Kúnjra	Ditto the Lower Provinces, 125 ditto.
57	Meu	Ditto Riware, 550 ditto.
58	Bandúkchi	Ditto Hira Hiri, Zillah Bijnore, 300 ditto.
59	Dom	Ditto Arabia, 400 years since.
60	Kanchan	Ditto the Panjáb, 550 ditto.
61	Pazzawagar	Ditto ditto, 300 ditto.

Numbers.	Caste.	Remarks.
62	Zahúrí	Came from Arabia, 400 years since.
63	Jhøjah	Natives of Saháranpúr, etc., took this appellation 500 years since.
64	Jhoghí	Came from Gujrát, 550 years since.
65	Gújar, Hindú, and Musulmans	Ditto Karnaul, 550 ditto.
66	Bharbúnja	Ditto Bhatnair, in Sirsa, 400 ditto.
67	Barwa	Ditto Srinagar, in Garhwál, 300 ditto.
68	Patwa	Ditto Agra, 300 ditto.
69	Lore	Ditto Dehli, 400 ditto.
70	Chepi	Ditto the Panjáb, 300 ditto.
71	Kapri	Ditto Rohilkhand, 300 ditto.
72	Bewra	Ditto Marwar, 90 ditto.
73	Kuzágar	Ditto Rohilkhand, 400 ditto.
74	Kumhár	Ditto the Lower Provinces, 400 ditto.
75	Saini	Ditto Dehli and ditto, 200 ditto.
76	Kahar	Ditto Dehli, 550 ditto.
77	Dakauth	Ditto Bengal, 550 ditto.
78	Bairagi	Ditto Ujjain, in Dekkan, 500 ditto.
79	Bhat	Ditto Gujrát, 500 ditto.
80	Kolí	Ditto the Lower Provinces, 500 ditto.
81	Sainsi and Banwaria	Ditto all parts of the country, 300 or 400 ditto.
82	Lodah	Ditto Gúrgaon, 550 ditto.
83	Rone	Ditto Hansi, 500 ditto.
84	Bengali	Ditto Bengal, 100 ditto.
85	Bhil	Ditto Bundelkhand, 150 ditto.
86	Mairah	Ditto Hills of Central India, 100 ditto.
87	Heri	Ditto the Lower Provinces, 200 ditto.
88	Pasi	Ditto Oudh, 100 ditto.
89	Kúrmí	Ditto ditto, 200 ditto.
90	Gadaria	Ditto the Panjáb, 550 ditto.
91	Khattíks	Ditto Ditto, 550 ditto.
92	Chamár	Ditto Riwarí and Muttra, 550 ditto.
93	Mihtar	Ditto Natives of Saháranpúr, 550 ditto.
94	Gosain	Ditto Ujjain, in Dekkan, 500 ditto.
95	Mughal	Ditto Turkey, 500 ditto.

H. D. ROBERTSON, Collector.

MUZAFFARNAGAR.

SAYYIDS.—The Sayyid families, forming what is known as the Bárhá Sádát, may be regarded as the characteristic element in the population of this district. This influential tribe, although shorn of much of the power and splendour it appears to have possessed under the empire of the Mughals, is still in the enjoyment of extensive zamíndárá rights in the east, south-east, and north-western portions of the district.

The Bárhá Sádát claim to be descended from Fátima, the daughter of Mahomed, and assert that their ancestor, Abu'l Fera, accompanied Mahomed of Ghazní on his first entry into India in the year 1001 A.D. From an early period of the Mahomedan rule they would seem to have obtained grants of land in the Muzaffarnagar District, and finally succeeded in acquiring the zamíndárí possession of a very large share of the finest parganahs.

The Bárhá Sádát are divided into four branches:—

1. Tainpuri, whose chief town is Jansath.
2. Chatbanúri, whose chief town is Sambalhera.
3. Kandlival, whose chief town is Majhera.
4. Jagveri, whose chief town is Bidoli.

A detailed account of the history of this family, with a narrative of the fortunes of each of the four branches, was submitted in English with the Settlement Report at the close of 1864.

There are, moreover, a few families of Sayyids who are not included in the Bárhá Sádát, but they are unimportant in either numbers or influence.

SHAIKHS.—This tribe of Musulmans is located in considerable numbers in the towns of Púr, Khandla, and Thanah Bhowan.

They claim to be descended from the four Khalifs, Abu Bekr, Omar, Usman, and Murtazá 'Alí, and are known respectively as the Shaikh Sadíki, Shaikh Farakhí, Shaikh Usmání, and Shaikh Abbasi, or Ulví Shaikhs. They assert themselves to have come into India with Mahomed of Ghazní, and to have been located in this district since that time.

PATHÁNS.—Several influential families of this tribe are to be found in the western portion of the district, and others in a lower condition of life are scattered over the whole of it.

They, too, assert that they have been settled in the Muzaffarnagar District since the time of Mahomed of Ghazní; but Mansúr 'Alí Khan, of Jallalabad, the present head of the family, states that the Patháns of that part to have come into the country in the time of Shahábu'd-dín Ghorí, and that the town of Jallalabad was founded by Jallal Khan in the reign of the Emperor Alamgir. The Patháns appear to have taken a leading part in the contests with the growing Sikh power established by Nanak.

MUGHALS.—This tribe, although not very numerous, is yet sufficiently so to claim a brief notice. They, like the other tribes of Musulmans, claim to have settled in the district on the first conquest of the country. They came originally from Turkistan.

GÁRHÁS are an industrious race, originally Hindu Rajputs it is supposed, though some say they were only slaves of Rajputs, and others say the name is a general one given to Hindus who have been converted to Mahomedanism; but such, at all events, does not appear to be the case in this district, where the classes enumerated above are as distinct to all appearance as so many castes of Hindus. Gárhás are so called from their having adopted with their new faith the Mahomedan practice of burying their dead. Little can be learnt of their history, but they state roughly that they were converted to the Mahomedan faith between 200 or 300 years ago.

JOJHÁS.—This tribe is in all probability composed of converted Rajputs; but why they have taken the distinctive name of Jojhás is not clear. They are said by some to have been converted slaves, and the name Jojhá, signifying stomach, may have been given to them in derision by the Hindus, as typical of the inferiority of their position.

JÁTS.—These are simply Játs converted to the Mahomedan religion, and are known as Musulman Játs. They are numerous throughout the district.

GÚJARS.—Like the Játs, they are known by their own name with the affix of Musulman.

RAJPUTS.—The Musulman Rajputs are generally, but by no means invariably, distinguished from the Hindu Rajputs by the name of Rangwár. It is uncertain at what period the four last-mentioned classes seceded from their ancient faith. Other converts, following various trades, have retained their old names and many of their caste distinctions.

BRAHMANS.—The chief tribes are the Gaur, the Gujrátí, and the Paliwal Brahmans.

Another tribe of Brahmans are known by the name of Bohrás: they follow the profession of money-lending and banking, and came into this district from Marwar in the time of Shah Alam.

THAGAS.—A fine race, mostly employed in agriculture, and claiming to be descended from a Brahman father and a Chatrani. They are said to have come from Bikanír, but the date is uncertain.

KÁYATHS.—The Káyaths in this district are of the Monahar family, and mostly belong to one of its gots known by the name of Batnagar. The Káyaths of Kyrana state that they came from Barh in the time of the Rajput sovereigns of Dehli, about 1,000 years ago. There are numerous sub-divisions of each got, that of Batnagar alone having, it is stated, no less than eighty-four. The Káyaths in other parts of the district are of more recent date, having settled about 200 years ago, in the reign of the Emperor Shahjahan.

KSHATRIYAS, CHATRÍS, OR RAJPUTS.—This caste is divided into two great families, the Chandarbansí and the Súrjibansí, and sub-divided into innumerable gots and áls; besides which it has thrown off a large number of what now rank as independent castes. The Súrjibansí Rajputs originally came from Ajúdhia, and the Chandarbansí from Hastinapur and Badrakanshí.

Members of either family are to be found in the district in considerable numbers, and many of them, as before-mentioned, have been converted to Mahomedanism. The castes which have sprung from Rajput fathers by women of other tribes, and which are to be met with in Muzaffarnagar, are as follows:—Khatrís, Játs, Gújars, Rowas, Sanís, Banjaras, Bhats, Mahesrís, Bedhaks, Bewarís, Barhís, Lohars, Zargars, Champís.

Khatrís are descended from a Rajput father by a woman of the Vaishya caste. They are not numerous.

JÁTS.—The origin of this race is obscure, and the accounts given by the members of the caste differ greatly. Many of them had come within the last hundred years from the Panjáb, but others have been settled in the district for a very much longer period. The common story is that they are descended from Rajput fathers by women of the Vaishya or Súdra tribes. They were formerly ranked among the thirty-six royal families of Rajputs. The Játs of Bhainsí, a large and flourishing community, assert that they have been settled in that spot for 1,600 years, and that they are called Jáls or Játs from Játra, the matted hair of Mahadeo, from which they sprang. I have not heard any mention of the story to which Elliot alludes of their having come originally from Ghazní, but their customs certainly point to an origin different from that of other Hindus. This industrious race of agriculturists is very numerous in this district, and has a great many subdivisions.

R. J. LEEDS, Assistant Collector.

MÍRAT.

JÁTS.—They are the most numerous of all the land-owning castes in Mírat, and are supposed to have seceded or been excommunicated from the Rajputs on account of some irregular ideas they held on the subject of marriage.

As in the case of Tagas, it is more probable that they are the descendants of a marriage of a Rajput into a lower caste; and one legend distinctly points to Rajah Jaswant Singh as their original ancestor, and he, as the story goes, married beneath his rank.

They all point to Haryana and Rajputana as the country whence they originally came, and it is probable that they emigrated thence in large bodies, occupying and settling down in the country from Dehli westward along the Jumna and lower rivers of the Panjáb—first appearing in the peaceful characters of agriculturists, but afterwards showing the natural instincts of their race by now and again following the pursuit of arms.

They gained their first footing in the Chapraulí, Kútanah, and Barote Parganahs of the Mírat District, pushing out before them the Taga occupants of the soil; and thence they spread themselves, though in less compact colonies, over the whole districts.

The Játs, as a caste, are again sub-divided amongst themselves into distinct families or tribes, which in many respects, particularly as regards marriage, hold aloof from each other.

There are the “Hela” Játs, the “Dehta,” the “Salkhan,” and the “Des” or “Desí” Játs, all distinct from each other, and recognizing some distinguishing customs.

The latter, or Desí, tribe are found in the greatest numbers.

W. FORBES, C.B., Collector.

GARHWÁL.

The manner in which Garhwál became peopled is enveloped in obscurity. The most recent immigration on a great scale is assigned to a period as remote as 745 Samvat, or 688 A.D., when a number of Brahmans and Rajputs from the plains are said to have come in with Kanakpal, a Guzeratí adventurer, who established himself in Chandpúr, and thence extended his conquests until he or his descendants reduced to one sceptre the petty chiefs who had ruled each, from his hill fort, a small portion of the country.

The descendants of these immigrants, whether as a conquering race or because they have better preserved their distinctions of Hinduism, still pride themselves on superiority to the older inhabitants. The Brahmans belonged to the Dravida, Adigarh, and Kanaujia branches of the great Brahman caste. The Rajputs included Chauháns from Dehli and Rantimbor, Powars from Guzerat, Tawars from Dehli, and others. Most of these families now take their names from the villages in which they are first settled, lying for the most part in Parganah Chandpúr; but have since extended themselves over the district, and are often not to be found at all in their original seats.

Next to these in consideration come a mass of Brahmans and Rajputs, who, though undoubted members of these two families, and immigrants from the plains of India, can give no account of themselves. They derive their names from villages in which they reside, or resided, and believe themselves to be indigenous to the hills.

A third class is that of the Khassias, who generally call themselves Rajputs; they are, however, pronounced to be Súdras by discerning Hindus: they do not wear the mystical thread of the two great castes. Another external custom which at once distinguishes them from the true Rajputs is their not disdaining to handle the plough—an act which the poorest Rajput in the hills delegates to a man of lower caste. They are generally believed by the natives to be the oldest inhabitants of Garhwál, and they doubtless are the oldest of the Hindu inhabitants, properly so called. They form nearly one-half of the entire population of Garhwál.

Closely connected with them in social bonds, and probably in history, are a large class of Brahmans sometimes called by their prouder brethren Khassia Brahmans, who do not disdain to act as purohīts to the Khassias, and to officiate at temples of petty local deities; they are probably the old Brahmans of Khasdes, the ancient name of Kamáon and Garhwál.

Lower yet in the social scale we find the remarkable race, the Doms. Their huts may be seen in every village subordinate to, and separate from, the Bithana, or patrician quarter of the Rajputs and Brahmans. Though totally opposed to all Hindu notions and traditions, which would rather represent them as the dregs of Hinduism, the inference is irresistible to a European mind that these are the aborigines of the hills, who have been reduced to their present state, or rather to the state of slavery and degradation in which they were found at the beginning of British rule, by successive waves of Hindu conquerors from the plains. They are distinguished from Hindus by their high cheek-bones, smaller but well-set frames, and greater vivacity of feature and gesture; and high authorities have discovered in them a resemblance to the Gonds, and other undoubted aboriginal tribes of India.

Distinct from all the above-named classes, though they love to confound themselves with Rajputs, are the Bhotias, who inhabit the villages at the entrance of the passes into Thibet, and engage in the Thibetan trade, spending half their time in Thibet and half under British rule, and worshipping alternately at Hindu and Buddhist shrines. The eyes obliquely set to the nose, the high cheek-bones, thin beard, and large projecting ears, proclaim undoubtedly an admixture of Mongolian blood; but there can be as little doubt that they are right in claiming a Hindu origin.

There are besides a few families of genuine Mongolians, some of whom during the last few years have taken up their homes permanently in this district. They are confounded together under the name of Khampas, and occupy one or two villages in the Niti Pass.

A connecting link between the Hindus and Mahomedans is formed by the Bisnoís, an eclectic sect, some of whom have come up from the Bijnore District and settled in Srínagar. They are said to be a turbulent class, and disliked by the rest of the community.

D. M. GARDNER, Assistant Commissioner.

BIJNORE.

BRAHMANS, 27,519.—Of the 27,519 Brahmans (exclusive of their degraded branches), the largest number belong to the Gaur class. There seem to be no Maithil, Utkal, Driaaur, Tailang, Karnátak, or Mahárasht Brahmans in the district; but there are about fifty families of Gujrátís, the same number of Saraswats, and two or three of Kanaujias. According to their own tradition, the Gaur Brahmans were invited from their native land in Bengal to this part of the country by Rajah Janmejey, son of Paríkshit, to assist him in the great sacrifice performed by him for the destruction of serpents, in retaliation of his father's death by the bite of the celebrated takshak. Having received largesses and assignments from the Rajah, they never returned to their homes. The reason why the Gaurs were invited from so long a distance, when other Brahmans of the Saraswat and Kankúbj classes were to be got in the neighbourhood, is said to be this,—that the latter classes were either reluctant to assist at so cruel a sacrifice, or they were not so well acquainted with the requirements of this particular kind of ceremony as the Brahmans of Bengal, who were always ahead of the inhabitants of any other part of India in the art of charming and controlling serpents.

TAGÁS, 10,572.—The Tagás are a class of Upa Brahmans (extra Brahmans), similar to, or perhaps synonymous with, the Bhúinhárs of Benares.

Having been tyagdia (abandoned) by their relations, they were originally styled Tyágá, and that word has been corrupted into Tagá.

The above is their own story, unsupported by written evidence; but by other people generally the Tagás are supposed to be the offspring of a Brahman by some low-caste woman. They are divided into two clans—the Bísáa, or uncorrupted; and the Dussa, or corrupted. Widow marriage is allowed among the Dussas, and not among the Bíssahs.

OCHARAJ MAHABRAHMAN OR KATTYA BRAHMAN, 179.—These Brahmans receive gifts offered for the benefit of the dead within thirteen days from the death, and are for that reason considered the most impure and degraded.

DAKAUT, OR PUDIA, OR JOSHÍ, OR BHARÁRA, 1,234 persons.—They are a degraded class of Brahmans. Their profession is to interpret the influence of the stars on persons of different names and at different times, and to receive gifts offered for averting the consequences of the influence of evil stars.

BHÁTS, 998.—The Bháts are said to be the progeny of a Brahman by a Súdra mother. One branch are called Brahma Bhát, their profession being the recitation or composition of poetry in praise (and sometimes in disparagement) of individuals. The second branch are called Jágas, and they are the pedigree-keepers of the Rajputs in particular, and other castes in general. Third class, Chárans, are the bards and heralds of the Rajput tribes. They are not to be found in these Provinces, but in Rajputana.

RAJPUTS, 2,319: THÁKURS, 87.—Rajput (king's descendant), and Thakur (lord of land) are terms of respect for a Kshatriya. The Rajputs and Thakurs enumerated in this district are mostly of the Bais and Gond tribes.

CHAUHÁNS, 71,685.—These Chauháns do not claim their descent from Prithiráj, the last Hindu King of Dehli, or his ancestors, like the real Chauháns of Mainpúrí, Pratápnír, and Nímrána.

KHATTRÍS, 921.—It is a subject of dispute whether the Khattrís are the old Kshatriyas, or a mixed class.

KAMBOH, 433.—According to their own account, the Kambohs are the old inhabitants of the trans-Indus country, and most of them were converted to Islam by Mahmúd of Ghazni. The Sanskrit name of Cabúl is Kamboj, and this is so similar to Kamboh, that, on the authority of the above tradition, these people may be safely conjectured to have been the ancient inhabitants of Cabúl. Their Mahomedan brethren state that they are the descendants of the ancient Kai dynasty of the Kings of Persia. On the last king of the dynasty having been dethroned and expelled from the country, he wandered about for some time with his family and dependants in the neighbouring countries. The company, wherever they went, was termed Kai Amboh (assembly of the Kais), and that appellation is corrupted into Kamboh.

Another tradition is that their ancestors were of the same descent as the Khattrís, and lived in the Panjáb.

The Musulman portion of the Kambohs are held in the same contempt by the other Mahomedans as the Afghans and Kashmírís are. The Persian proverb is :—

Yeke Afghan, doyam Kamboh, Si'm badzat Kashmíri.

The Afghan, the Kamboh, and the Kashmírí are rogues.

BANNIAHS, 18,151.—All sorts of traders of the Vaisya class are included in this head. The greater portion of them are of the Agarwala branch, inclusive of the Dassas, Bísas, Jamís, and Vaishnos.

BISHNOÍS, 4,308.—They are Banniahs who, without regard to their caste, follow the religion of Jhamájí. This man propagated his precepts in the country of Marwar about the year 1460 A.D. With the exception of Vishnu, they worship no Hindu deity, and are therefore held in contempt by the Hindus.

AHÍRS, 4,748.—This caste is usually put down among Súdras, but according to the “Bhágwat Púran”—which distinctly says that Nand Ahír, the adoptive father of Krishna, was a Vaisya,—they claim to be of the Vaisya class. Abhír, of which Ahír seems to be a corruption, is a mixed class according to Manu. A Gopa, which is another name for an Ahír, is a true Súdra according to the “Jatimala;” but tradition makes them the progeny of a Vaisya slave girl and a Rajput slave. They seem to be very old inhabitants of the district, for the “Ayín Akbarí” shows that there were many Ahír zamíndárs in Parganah Naggína in Akbar’s time.

According to one tradition, the word Ahír is derived from the word ahi, a snake, and her, to love (or lover of snakes), because when the children of the slave and slave girl lived in the jungle they used to feed snakes with milk.

KAISTH, 3,516.—According to the “Jatimala” Kaisths seem to be the true Súdras. They are there mentioned immediately after the Gopas, and before the mixed classes. Their origin is said to be thus :—That a Súdra of the name of Bhútídatta was so clever in household affairs, that the prince, his master, styled him Kaisth (kai, a house, and stittèi, to settle) as his future designation. The following are the twelve branches of the Kaisths :—

- | | | |
|---------------|---------------|-----------------|
| 1.—Mathar. | 5.—Súrajdhaj. | 9.—Balmak. |
| 2.—Bhatnagar. | 6.—Amisht. | 10.—Aithana. |
| 3.—Sribastab. | 7.—Gaur. | 11.—Kalserisht. |
| 4.—Saksena. | 8.—Karan. | 12.—Nigam. |

JÁT, 54,989.—This caste is nowhere mentioned in the ancient Hindu books. They everywhere call themselves degraded Rajputs, and there is no doubt that this assertion is correct to some extent; but the conjecture that they are emigrants from the trans-Indus regions is also well founded. According to their tradition, the original Ját tribe, called Ponea, sprung from the locks (juta) of Mahadeo, or one of his chief attendants at Mount Kylas. It must be observed that Mount Kylas is not very far from the Hindu Kush, which, according to the Greek historians of antiquity, was the abode of the Getes, of whom the Játis are conjectured to be a colony. From Kylas the Játis are said to have descended into the plains of the Panjáb, and thence to have spread themselves in all Upper and Western India, increasing their numbers by admitting degraded and excommunicated Rajputs to the tribe, and marrying women of almost every class. During the decline of the Mughal dynasty, they became independent princes and sovereigns of parts of Western India.

In this district there are three sorts of Játis—Chaudrís, Deswalas, and Pachandas.

GÚJARS, 6,851.—Originally Gochar, or cattle-graziers. They sometimes pretend to be degraded Rajputs, and sometimes Ahírs.

SANÍS, 42,736.—This caste is the same as Malís.

ROWAS, 9,093.—Very good cultivators. They call themselves low Rajputs, and are said to have settled in this district in the reign of Shahjahan. The mode in which women of this caste procure their divorce is peculiar in itself—all they have to do is to throw an upla, or dried cake of cowdung, from outside into the house; seeing this done, the husband separates himself from his wife without further formalities, and for ever.

SAYYIDS, 10,285.—Descendants of Fatima, the favorite daughter of Mahomed.

MUGHALS, 1,564.—Originally inhabitants of Central Asia. Their tribes are Barlash, Choghatta, Kuzalbash, U'zhí, Tark, Kye, Chak, and Tajak.

JOLAHAS, 60,333.—Very few of these are Hindus, called for the sake of distinction Bhainbar.

KAUR LACHMAN SINGH, Deputy Collector.

BAREILLY.

Before entering upon the points noticed in the orders of the Board, I think it would not be uninteresting and out of place if I attempt to give a brief and rapid sketch of the antecedents of this district, so far as I have been able to ascertain. I do not and cannot vouch for the accuracy of the narrative, for, as it is well known that there are no authentic works to assist me in the matter, I merely give the facts as I have been able to gather from conversation with the intelligent native gentlemen of this city, and from certain extant manuscripts in possession of some of them.

The country was previously covered with dense jungle, and sparsely inhabited by Ahírs in charge of herds of cattle, sent here to graze by rajahs and other large cattle-owners. A little cultivation was also here and there attempted for providing their own simplest necessities. The country was then called Tuppa Ahíran. Matters continued in this primitive state till the subjugation of Hindustan by Timúr, and his ascension to the throne of Dehli, when, the Ahírs becoming turbulent, Rajah Kharack Singh and Rao Harri Singh, feudal lords of Tirhut, were deputed by the Emperor to bring them to their senses. They came to the place, easily routed the ill-formed and undisciplined Ahír hordes who opposed their progress, and finally took possession of the country. Timúr's lieutenants being of the Kather caste, the country was named Mulki-Kather.

Some of the relatives, attendants, and retainers of the two brothers went to Powayen, Kharral, and other places in the Shahjahánpúr District, where, forcibly or otherwise taking possession of a large number of villages, they became talúkdars. A second party went to and settled in Chaupalla, now called Moradabad, after the name of Moradbaksh, son of Shahjahan, in whose reign the district was subjugated from the Katherias.

The now ruined feudal family of Shísgarh is descended from Kharack Singh, and the Rajah of Khatar and Talúkdar of Mahal from Rao Harri Singh.

At or about this time one Basdeb and his brother, Barreldeb, of the Katheria caste, built a small town, now called the old town, erected a fort, the ruins of which can still be seen, and called the settlement after their joint names Bas Barell, which in course of time became corrupted into Bans Bareilly, the present name of this city and the district.

In Akbar's time the management of the country was withdrawn from the Katherias.

I now proceed to the question of sub-divisions of caste. The question, I confess, is a very difficult one, and rendered more intricate in the absence of all authentic and faithful work on the subject. In the books which are available for reference the facts are so commingled with ridiculous traditions and ludicrous stories of mythology, that it is very difficult to separate the one from the other. Almost all the sub-sects claim their descent from one or other of the heavenly bodies, or of the several millions of Hindu mythological deities. However, I have made an attempt to separate the chaff from valuable historical facts, and the result is embodied in the following paragraphs.

Originally there were only four castes amongst the Hindus—1st, Brahman, i.e., priests, lawyers, and professional mendicants; 2nd, Kshatriyas, i.e., the governing class; 3rd, Baishyas, traders and cultivators; and 4th, Súdras, who had menial services assigned to them. From these four primary classes have sprung up the present scores of sub-sects we find in the country.

First, as regards the Brahmans. Originally there was only one class of Brahmans, called Sanadh. Subsequently they emigrated towards the Vindhya chain, and those who settled on the south of it took the name of Panch (i.e., five) Dravir, and those on its north, Panch Gaur—those who did not so emigrate retaining their original name of Sanadh. Under the first there are again five sub-classes, i.e. :—

- 1.—Guzeratí, from the men having settled in Guzerat.
- 2.—Drávir, from Dravar, near the River Narbadda.
- 3.—Maharast, from Maharatta.
- 4.—Tilang, from Tilang.
- 5.—Karnatak, from Karnatic.

Under Panch Gaur have sprung up a like number of sub-classes, each being called after the name of the country where they settled, i.e. :—

- 1.—Gor, from Gor, in Bengal.
- 2.—Sarsúth, from the name of the stream Sarosottí, on the banks of which they settled.

3.—Kankubj, from Kanauj, in the district of Farrakhabad.

4.—Maithal, from Mithila, near Tirhut, in Bengal.

5.—Utkal, pandahs or priests of Jaggarnath, of Kattack.

Besides the above, there are nine additional classes of this sect, but they do not appear to be of pure blood, though they would, if questioned, vehemently assert their claim to it.

1.—Mathúr.—Chaubeys of Muttra. Rumour has it that the men were previously Játs.

2.—Magat.—Priests of Gya, in Behar.

3.—Paukarn.—Priests of Pushkar, in Ajmír.

4.—Gautam.—Alleges to be descended from a saint named Gautam.

5.—Ekbassy.—Priests of Baldeo, near Muttra.

6.—Mohaverry.

7.—Golab Púrab.

8.—Pandey.

9.—Taggah.

There is another sub-sect which I omitted to mention before,—I allude to the Pahárí Brahmans. Some eight centuries ago the then Rajah of Nepaul, with the view of inducing the different sects of Brahmans to have intermarriage between them, sent for them. Brahmans of seven out of the ten sects went to Nepaul, acquiesced in the proposal of the Rajah, and settled in the country.

KASHMERES.—The Kashmere pandits, who attempt to pass themselves off as an offshoot of the Brahman class, are in reality Kaeths, and, like them, are the descendants of the illegitimate children of Chittar Gupta, of the Byás caste. They emigrated to Kashmere, took the name of pandits, and formed themselves into a separate caste. They therefore have no intermarriage between their brother Kaeths of the plains, nor do they mess together.

BÁBÚ RAJKISSEN MÚKERJÍ,

Head Clerk, Collector's Office.

SHAHJAHANPUR.

The tribe of Hindus found in the greatest numbers in this district are as follows:—The Chandela and Kátheya tribes, who in the paraganah of Jallalabad hold, the former 197, and the latter 49, villages.

Different families of the Kanaujia stock, such as Sanadh, Misr, Súkal, and others, also hold 23 villages in the same part of the district. The Kayeth tribe, chiefly of the Saksena, Bhatnagar, and Siri Wásthah families, hold 18 villages, and were at one time more opulent than now.

In Khera Bajhera the prevailing clan is the Jangahara, and in Tilhar and Jallalpúr the same tribe in smaller numbers—the Bachhal and Katharya being more numerous. Tomar and Gor are also met with. The Pathak Brahmans also hold some villages. The Bachhal tribe appear to be the earliest recorded occupants of that part of the district lying to the north of Shahjahanpúr, where there are also found Katharyas in considerable numbers. The tract thus occupied includes the parganahs of Negohí, Powayan, and Khotar. In the latter parganah and its immediate neighbourhood the Katharyas hold 147 villages. The Gor Rajputs also have several villages in the same tract. There is also a tribe which is said to have descended from the Nepal Hills, now settled in Pullá, called Parbattí. The Bachhal clan is again found in the Shahjahanpúr Parganah, where there are also Gor and Pomar families. The Bachhal Thakurs hold 71 villages in this parganah; the Gor Thakurs hold some 50 villages near Powayan, Seramau, and Khotar; and the Pomars, 36 in the same parganah, in the same neighbourhood. The limits of this note do not permit me to particularize the sub-divisions of each of these clans which are to be found in the district, or to enter in detail into an account of other inferior or servile castes, which form a large part of its population.

As regards the origin of the tribes inhabiting the district, I gather from local traditions that Gújars, Ahírs, Banjarahs, and Játs are the earliest known inhabitants, and that those tribes which have established themselves here in more recent times drove out or conquered them, to be themselves in turn in a great measure supplanted by Musulmans from beyond the Indus. In the south of the district the Chandela tribe is the most powerful and numerous, and many years ago gave much trouble to Government from their intractable and quarrelsome habits, by whom they were known as the Kanddhar Thakurs, from the chief village in an iláka of that name, held by a numerous family comprising nearly 300 proprietors, of whom Rajah Dale Sing is the head.

This tribe originally came from the Chandeli Des, in Southern Bundelkhand, where they are found in great numbers, under one Rajah Sirpal. His descendant in the fifth generation, Rajah Pirmal, moved from Sheorajpúr (in Cawnpore) and occupied Mohamdabad (in Farrakhabad), from whence the sons of his relation, Petamber Singh, by name Dhir Sah and Bhir Sah, crossed the Ganges and occupied Chachnapúr, a village belonging to the Chachúa Kúrmís, in Jallalabad, and spread themselves over the neighbouring villages, seizing those they found deserted, and expelling the possessors of others when able to do so.

The Kanaujia Brahmans appear to have followed the Thakúrs both of the Chandela and Bachhal clans, and to have received in gift, as religious offerings for their maintenance, the villages they possess.

The Rathores, who are not numerous in this district, though found very frequently on its southern border, hold one village, which they acquired through one of their tribe, Kasib, marrying the daughter of Sahdal, the Katheya Thakur of Barah Kallan, who bestowed on him Mauzah Kajari, Parganah Jallalabad, which they still possess. This occurred some 400 years ago. The Katheya Thakurs state that they came originally from Jallander,—a tradition similar to that of many tribes, e.g., Banjaras and Játs, etc., who describe their ancestors as being immigrants from the west.

Their settlement in this district is said to have taken place 300 years ago, when Rajah Mokat Sing came from Patialí (in Etah) and occupied Usain (in Badáon), which was then included in the dominions of Rajah Jaychand Rathore, of Kanauj. The name of the hero has been better preserved than the date of his conquest, as we find that the Emperor Humayún bestowed the government of Sambhal on Askarry Mirza in the year 1532 A.D. The incursion of this tribe probably occurred much earlier, at a time when the Musulmans had not established themselves in this part of the country, as the Katheyas speak of their ancestors clearing the jungle and planting villages, and peopling the land with their tribe. The death of Jaychand, the famous Rajah of Kanauj, is, moreover, placed in the era of Kutbu'd-dín at the end of the twelfth century A.D.

The Pomar Thakurs, who hold between 70 and 80 villages in the parganahs of Jallalabad and Shahjahanpúr, describe themselves as coming originally from Ujjain, in Central India, under the leadership of Rawat Singh, who seized on Kúria Bans Kiria, in Parganah Shah-jahanpúr, and, clearing the jungle and expelling the inhabitants of neighbouring villages, established themselves in this part of the country.

The Gotam Thakurs, like all their tribe, describe themselves as coming from Arghal in Parganah Kora (in Fattihpúr) where a family claiming to be the head of the race is still to be met with. They hold 37 villages in the south of the district. The Badúria Thakurs have only three villages, and the Chauhán Thakurs only two, in the south of the district. They are to be found scattered about in other parts. Some of the latter have also a zamíndarí acquired by marriage in Pallea, a parganah under the Tarai in the north of the district. These tribes are respectively offshoots of the Badúrias of Bah Pinahat (in Agra), and the Chauháns of Mainpúri and Baugaon (in Mainpúri).

The Gor Thakurs ascribe their possessions in this district to permission having been given them by the Emperor of Dehli to dispossess the Gújars of their lands in this neighbourhood, and that their incursion took place some 900 years ago, under the leadership of Khag Rae and Bagh Rae, who came from Oudh and took possession of 62 villages, of which they still hold 50.

They are allied to the Katharyas, and, as these two tribes are found generally dwelling together, and the Gor Rajputs claim to be Katharyas, their immigration into this part of Rohilkhand may be placed at a very early date, for in ancient times the province was called Kathair, as is said, from its being chiefly occupied by that tribe, whose warlike habits secured them from conquest by the Musulmans until the era of Shahjahan.

Kathair, however, appears to have been often invaded by Musulman armies; and many villages now inhabited by these tribes were included in the Sirkar of Badaon as belonging to the district of Gola; but they claim to have been independent of the Emperor of Dehli for three generations after Akbar's fiscal divisions of sirkars and parganahs were framed.

The Rajah of Powayan is the head of the Gor tribe, and the Rajah of Khotar of the Katharyas. The country inhabited by the Gor and Katharya Thakurs is nearly coterminous with the parganah of Gola, as described in the zillahbandí of Akbar's reign: but they spread themselves into parts of the modern divisions of Pillibhít and Lackimpúr (in Barcilly and Oudh), which were not altogether included in Gola. Whether the ancient town of Gora in Powayan, or Gola in Lackimpúr, gave its name to this division, I am unable to say.

The same district was to a great extent peopled by the Bachhal clan, and the Katharyas state that their occupation of Eastern Rohilkhand dates from the defeat of the Bachhal Thakurs in one of the incursions of the royal army, when the Emperor gave the Katharyas their villages.

The tribe appears, under all circumstances, to have been established here from very ancient times. They are said to have occupied the chief part of the district of Gola, before mentioned, and are now to be found in parts of the Shahjahanpúr parganah, in Negohí and Tilhar. Their first appearance in this part of the country is said to have been in the year 1000 A.D., under the leadership of Daro Pad, who occupied some territory near the modern Farrakhabad. They spread through the country in a northerly direction, and count among their famous men Raja Ben, who founded Matí, which afterwards gave its name to one of the tappahs of the fiscal division of Gola. Elliot records their occupation in Eastern Rohilkhand as antecedent to that of the Katharyas, and local traditions confirm his view. From this tribe arose the family of Rajah Deo and his twelve sons, whose descendants, or rather those who claim to be so, are to be found scattered throughout the Shahjahanpúr, Tilhar, and Farrídpúr parganahs. The parganah of Negohí was occupied by this man's family. As late as the middle of the sixteenth century, Chabbi Singh, one of the tribe, obtained, partly by a grant of the Emperor and partly by violence, a territory extending over parts of the Kant, Powayan, Tilhar, and Shahjahanpúr parganahs; and at a later date one of his descendants obtained possession of Semaría, which, along with seventy other villages in these parts, is still in the possession of this tribe. One Rajah Tilokchand Bachhal is said to have occupied Tilhar, and to have settled his tribe in Pattah Chirkola, now called Jallalpúr, driving out the Gújars and Banjaras. The Katharyas again appear on the scene, and local tradition survives of their coming from the neighbourhood of Benares, which confirms Elliot's view that they took their name from Katehar, in the neighbourhood of Benares, and not from their connection with the Katharia Gor Rajputs, who assert their designation to be derived from kathirí, a carpenter. Their leader is said to have been one Nagdeo.

There are also found Tomar and Gor families. These are no doubt the descendants of the aboriginal inhabitants, the Banjaras, who number among the numerous gots of their claim both Tomars and a family who call themselves Gor, from their descent through a Gor Brahman, with whom one of their tribe intermarried.

The tradition that the Bachhal tribe cleared land and settled themselves in Tilhar and Negohí indicates their origin as being more ancient than the Katharyas, who only ousted the Gújars in Jallalpúr.

The Bachhal tribe brought into the country the Páthak Brahmans, who still hold villages in Tilhar, which they received as a religious offering for their maintenance.

The tribe of Jangahara Rajputs are chiefly found in the Khera Bajhera parganah. This clan has always had a name for fighting, and they state their designation to be derived from the words jang, war, and áhara, a Baka word for bhank (hunger),—the men who hunger for war. It is a common joke against a Jangahara to say that their name means beaten in war, jang hara, an interpretation which they will not admit to be correct. The tribe are found in other parts of the district, but their chief seat is in the neighbourhood of Khera Bajhera parganah.

The Kayaths own 18 villages in Jallalabad, and have zamindáris in other parts of the district as well.

There is a tradition that 50 villages in Jallalabad were in very ancient times held by Sayyids, who maintained themselves on the north bank of the Ganges by the assistance of their brethren in Shamsabad, but that they were driven out by an incursion of Rajputs, and have now only four villages in their possession. The town called Jallalabad is said to have been first known by the name of Karankolapúr Patheyn, in the era of Rajah Prithí Raj, of Hastinápúra (Dehli); and it next was occupied by some Jogis, from whom it derived the name of Jogípúr, and retained it until Jallalu'd-dín Akbar, obtaining possession of it, called it after his own name; that Hafiz Rehmat Khan, the Nawab of Bareilly, built a fort on the khera in the village. The village is partly owned by Kayaths as above-mentioned, and partly by Kanaujia Brahmans, who were brought into the country by the Chandela and Bachhal Thakurs.

The Musulman proprietors in the neighbourhood are chiefly Yuzofzaie, Warakzaie, and Mahmand Afghans.

The site of Shahjahanpúr was formerly called Noner Khera, and its neighbourhood was inhabited by Gújars, defended by a fort at the junction of the Garra and Kanhaut rivers, built by Maghi and Bhola, two of their leaders.

C. J. DANIELL, Officiating Collector.

TARAI PARGANAHS.

There are only two tribes in the Tarai which call for remark. The others have moved in from neighbouring districts at various periods; and information regarding them will be forwarded in the report of the district in which they preponderate; as, for instance, the Rains in Pilibhít.

The two castes and tribes above referred to—namely, the Bhuksas and Thárús—are unable to afford any information regarding the period or the reason of their settling in the Tarai, beyond that the former state that they came from Dharanagar, and the latter from Chittor.

The Bhuksas still claim to be addressed as Thakur, and a few wear the thread, or janeo. Sir H. Elliot, in page 258, under the article “Des,” alludes, among others, to a district entered in the ancient registers in Sirkar Kamaon as “Bhuksar, now Kilpúrí and Rúderpúr.” Bhuksar is the name still used for localities inhabited by Bhuksas, without reference to any particular boundaries, as Thárúat signifies tracts inhabited by Thárús.

The Thárú traditions state that they come from Chittor, and refer to Jaimal and Pattah. They state that they were driven from their home and settled here. The reference would appear to indicate the third sack of Chittore—i.e., that by Akbar, about 1560 A.D. They claim to have been originally Rajputs, and state that their ancestors lost their caste by taking to intoxicating liquors and rearing fowls. I have never heard from them any allusion to a Gúrkha or hill origin, an idea which their type of feature itself suggests. The Thárús, as the Bhuksas, are sub-divided into gots; and interspersed with them are other tribes, who are generally called Thárús, but who are quite distinct, such as Gaharwár, who claim to be Rajputs, and are probably some of the Gaharwárs whom Sir H. Elliot describes as a most interesting race, over whose origin and lineage much obscurity hangs. These never intermarry or eat with the Thárús, abstain from liquor, and never rear fowls; others, again, as Dangras, are looked down on as a lower caste by the Thárús.

Sir H. Elliot says, referring to the Bhuksas, that "those who reside in Kilpúrí and Tabna are said occasionally to intermarry with the Thárús;" and states them to be "a tribe found inhabiting the forest under the hills from Púranpúr Tabna, on the Sardah, to Chandpúr, on the Ganges." At present no village of Bhuksas is situated to the east of the Kitcha or Gola river, which is about thirty miles west of the Sardah river, and which is the existing boundary between the two tribes. The Bhuksas range from its west bank to the Ganges, and the Thárús to the east, as far, I believe, as Gorakhpúr. I have never heard of the two tribes intermarrying; indeed, the Bhuksas marry on attaining puberty, while the Thárús are married as young as their means will permit. Cases occur of men of one tribe eloping with women of the other, and a small village exists chiefly inhabited by the progeny of such left-handed marriages. It is situated exactly between where the Bhuksa villages end and the Thárú villages commence.

Either tribe claims superiority in caste, and repudiates any attempt at tracing them to a common origin, or of any connection between them; nor is there, in my opinion, any evidence on which such an attempt could be based. Their claims to respective superiority, however, rest on very small grounds,—the Bhuksas charging the Thárús with rearing fowls, which they do; while the Thárús say Bhuksas sell flesh and fish, which they deny indignantly.

It is a circumstance worth remarking that two tribes, under such similar circumstances, should have kept so distinct while living in such close proximity. They are both superstitious, and, as a rule, truthful, much given to intoxicating drink, and not very chaste; both more or less migratory, only continuing to cultivate the land until it is exhausted, and then moving off to fresh grounds; both utterly reckless with water, with which they inundate their fields, if allowed to, and utterly careless of the swamps they may be forming : indeed, most of the worst swamps could be easily proved to owe their origin to the rude irrigating means used by these people. Both tribes are supposed to be adepts in magical arts. A few Bhuksas in conversation with me have claimed such powers for persons of their caste ; but generally they laugh at the idea, though they attribute their comparative immunity from marauders during the disturbances caused by the Mutiny to the general belief in their superhuman powers, which the Desís, or plains-people, entertained. At the same time they have the greatest confidences in their bararars, or medicine-men, who are consulted on every occasion, and who mulct them heavily for their services.

As a general rule the Thárú is more intelligent than the Bhuksa.

It is uncommon to find a Bhuksa village with the same name as a Thárú village. If the Bhuksas had gradually retired before the Thárús from the Sardah to the Golah, names still common among them might be expected in the three parganahs inhabited by Thárús east of the Golah, alias Kitcha, river ; but I do not know of any instance, except such common names as Biria or Mahola, which offer no clue ; and where Bhuksas are found living in villages called Khanpúr, Hussainpúr, Fattihgang, and Dímarkhera, any attempt at tracing them through their village names is hopeless.

Neither of the tribes have any acknowledged leaders, through whom, or through whose title, a clue might be obtained. The office barwaick or barbaik of the Thárús, being hereditary, continues in certain families ; but they now exercise no function. It appears to have been given to certain Thárú head-men by Kamaon Rajahs for the reasons assigned by Sir H. Elliot in his "Supplementary Glossary." The Bhuksas in the Tarai still recognize the authority of a man who is, I believe, a resident of a village in Kashípúr ; but this authority appears also to have been conferred by Kamaon Rajahs, and is chiefly exercised in settling private disputes relating to family matters, and is generally exercised by administering a whipping with a cloth.

Thárús in this district declare themselves distinct from those who live to the east of the Kanaita river, in Oudh, whom they declare to be a very inferior caste,—a compliment invariably returned by the few Thárús I have met from that locality. They do not intermarry.

Neither of these tribes claim for their ancestors the credit of excavating the tanks, erecting the buildings, or sinking the masonry wells, ruins of which still exist in the Tarai; nor do they connect them in any way with their own history. To this day neither the Thárús or Bhukasas build even earthen walls for their houses, which are made of posts driven into the ground, with beams resting on them. The walls are made of reeds, locally termed tant, tied with grass, and generally smeared over with mud and cow-dung, with a thatched roof. The Thárús keep their residences scrupulously clean. For wells, which they only use for drinking purposes, and never for irrigation, a hollowed tree is sunk into the ground. They employ hill or plains men as lohars, etc., which all tends to prove that they never possessed knowledge sufficient to admit of their erecting the places and wells above referred to.

Generally, all that can be considered as tolerably certain is that the Bhukasas came about the 11th century from Dharanagar, and the Thárús in the 16th from Chittor, into the Tarai, which they sought as a refuge, and which tract was never practically under Mahomedan rule, and indeed was looked on as wild and dreadful by the troops of that power till the time of the Rohilla Pathans; that these tribes assisted the Kamaon Rajah, by whom they were protected, and from whom they received sannads, etc.; that they were ever, as now, distinct; and that they were probably different branches of Rajputs.

E. COLVIN, Superintendent.

MUTTRA.

The population of the Muttra District consists almost entirely of Hindus, nearly half of whom are Jâts. Next to the Jâts, in point of number, are the Brahmans, Chamárs, Rajputs, Kolís, and Gaḍariyas.

The history of the Jâts is a most curious one. It seems that about fifty years ago they consisted of two distinct and separate tribes, comprising many subordinate gots or clans. These tribes were,—the Deswala, that is, the old inhabitants of the country; and the Pacháda, who were, as their name imparts, settlers from the west or north-west. Tradition varies as to the origin of the Deswala, but the commonest story is that they are descended from Rajputs who married slave girls; and it is certain that they have been in the country from time immemorial. The Pachada, on the other hand, are, comparatively speaking, a modern race. In all probability they did not appear in Hindustan till the 5th century of our era. Most of them speak of the Panjáb and neighbouring countries, and all agree in pointing to the north-west of India as their original seat. There is historical evidence that they were settled in large numbers on the lower Indus about 200 A.D., and they seem from time to time to have been making their way into these provinces. I am told that not more than 150 years ago, numbers of these Pachada Játs came and settled in and around the Muttra District.

It is not known whence the Játs derive their name; it is, however, supposed that they were once identical with the Gauta of classic history. Be this as it may, we know from the "Zafarnama" of Sharfu'd-dín that Timúr, when he invaded India, believed the Játs of the Panjáb to be of the same race as the Tartars whom he met in Central Asia.

There is little to be said regarding the Brahmans of Muttra. They are principally of the Sanadh tribe. Two classes, however—the Chaubeys and Ahvásís,—are deserving of notice. The Chaubeys are so named from their supposed knowledge of the four Vedas, and are found in many parts of India; but there is a distinct clan peculiar to the city of Muttra. It is said that Muttra is their original seat, though they were compelled by persecution to leave it for a time, and seek the protection of King Sarsein, the grandfather of Krishna, at his capital on the Jamna, near Batesar.

I have not been able to ascertain when and how the Muttra Chaubeys seceded from their brethren. They have probably been separate from time immemorial, yet their separation is marked by no great distinction of manners and customs. There is one strange practice peculiar to the Muttra Chaubeys, due, I believe, to their limited numbers.

C. TWIGG, Assistant Magistrate and Collector.

AGRA.

Of the Brahmans there are ten sub-divisions, as given in the margin—sub-divisions purely local. With respect to the five Drávira clans, I may note that, whereas Colebrooke gives "Kashmíri" as the fifth, all accounts in this district give "Karnatik." The latter would seem to be the more

5 Gor.—Gor (proper), Kan-kúbj, Sarsút, Mithila, Utkal.

5 Drávira.—Tailang, Mahá-rásh, Gúzeratí, Drávira, Karnatik.

correct. None of these are found here; and of the five Gor clans, the Gor proper, the Kankúbj, and the Sarsút are the only three with which we have to deal, and of these, the Kankúbj alone hold any prominent place. Gors are found in the parganahs of Pharrah, Fírozabad, and Khandaulí, as purohīts to Ahír and other zamíndárs, while members of the Sarsút clan are found in these three parganahs, also in that of Fattihabad; but they are only in small numbers, and possess no landed property. Members of both clans are found in the city of Agra. There are five divisions of the Kankúbj Brahmans, given in the margin. The first two appear in great force in this district, but of the others I have discovered no traces, and their true country lies to the east of the Ganges. The country of the Sanadhs and Kanaujias proper may be roughly represented as a triangle, having for its western side a line drawn from Pilibhít, in Rohilkhand, to the south-west of Muttra; and for its eastern, a line from Pilibhít to the junction of the Jumna and Ganges at Allahabad; and for its base, the country bordering upon the Jumna and Chambal rivers. Of this triangle the western half forms the country of the Sanadhs, and the eastern of the Kanaujias.

1.—Gors.

2.—Sarsút.

3.—Kankúbj.

1.—Kanaujia proper.

2. Sanadh.

3. Sarwarra.

4. Jijhoti.

5. Bhurhar.

SANADHS.—Tradition assigns the separation of this clan from the parent stock to their founder having condescended to officiate at a jág performed by Rám Chander after the defeat and death of Ráwan—an act which alienated them from their stricter brethren, who, from the murdered Ráwan having been himself a Brahman, had refused to take part in it. This district forming part of the original country of the Sanadhs, they prevail in great force, and apparently outnumber the representatives of any of the other clans. In Parganah Pináhat especially, there is scarcely a village in which they are not found as zamíndárs, cultivators, or purohīts.

KANAUJIAS PROPER.—Of these there are in all sixteen sub-divisions, but only the following appear to be represented in any force:—

DÍCHHIT.—Why this appellation of “the initiated,” properly common to all Brahmans, should have become applied specially to this clan, is scarcely apparent, nor have I been able to trace the origin of the tribe. They are scantily represented here, and appear chiefly in Parganah Pharrah, where they have been residents for some 500 years.

CHAUBES.—So called from their reading the four Veds.

GOHAN.—Of this clan there are very few representatives.

CHAURASÍAS.—These are noticed in the Report from Khandaulí only. They appear to have followed the migration of the Sikarwar Thakurs in the capacity of purohīts, and beyond a doubt received their name from the “Chaurasí” of the Thakurs. Most probably they came from Gwalior, as Elliot mentions having discovered traces of a Chaurasí of Sikarwars there at Pahargarh.

RITORIAS.—The countries of Jessalmír, Bikanír, Udeypúr, and Rajputana generally form the head-quarters of this family, members of which have from time to time journeyed eastwards. Within the Agra District they are found mainly in the Parganahs of Fattihabad and Fírozabad, and in one or two villages of Parganah Kheragarh.

LAHARIAS.—Said to be a degenerate branch of the Sanadh tribe.

GOLAPÚRABS.—Said by some also to have originally belonged to the Sanadh family, and to have sprung from Galib Rishi—some say by a low-caste widow, others by Saksení, daughter of the Chanderbans Rajah Chandersen.

BHÁTS AND JOSHÍS.—From their wearing the Brahmanical thread, the classes of Bhát and Joshí, bards and astrologers, may here be noticed. But they are not true Brahmans, and accept as offerings iron vessels, cloths, etc., which none but the most degenerate of the priestly class would take.

CHATTRÍS.—These claim next attention, and in historical interest might even claim precedence of the Brahmanical tribes. The following are the prominent clans in this district:—

CHAUHÁNS—Who belong to the Súrajbansí branch. A fabulous origin is assigned to them. It is said that they were “created” at a jág performed by a great rishi, Basisthmuni. They are found in all parts of the district, but their chief residence is in the Khandaulí parganah, where they boast descent from the great but ill-fated Pirthí Raj. Tradition states that Sangat Rai, the grandson of Chahic Deo, Pirthí’s brother, had twenty-two sons, of whom seven settled at Balráam, in the Etah District, whence their descendants, the Chauháns, subsequently migrated to parts of Muttra and Agra. The time of this movement it is impossible to ascertain, but they would seem to have occupied their present positions for upwards of 500 years. Their dispersion in all probability took place very soon after the downfall of the Hindu monarchy.

BHADAURIAS.—These are a branch of the Chauháns, gaining their distinctive name from Bhadáwar, near Atah, south of the Chambal. This place appears to have formed the centre of their territory, which included the parganah of Pinnáhat in this district. Only in Pinnáhat do they appear in any force.

SIKARWÁR.—Also belonging to the Súrjábansí family. They appear to be so styled from their residence about Sikarwári, in the Gwalior territory. Thence they have at times, from 400 to 600 years ago, moved northwards, and sent their representatives into this district.

MORÍS.—Also Súrjábansís. The true origin of this name is unknown. One account derives it from an alleged ancestor, Moraddúj. Their true country is Dholpúr, and the tract round Chitorgarh.

PARIHÁRS.—This term also appears underived, nor have I been able to trace out the original locality of this clan.

POMÁRS.—Originally seated in Oujein. Their appearance in these parts is thus explained:—Raja Bijípál, of Baiana, wished to bring about an alliance between his daughter and the son of Tindpal, of Oujein, and with this view sent an embassy with presents. Tindpal, however, objecting to the proposed marriage, ordered the ambassador to return; but his son Lakansí, meeting them on his own account, accepted the proposal, and, in spite of Tindpal's objections, brought back the party to Baiana, and there the marriage took place.

JADONS.—These are the descendants of the Chanderbansí Raja Yadu, and were first seated in the parts round Keraulí, on the Chambal, and Baiana.

BARESTRÍS.—These are a branch of the Jadons, and descendants of Raja Tindpal, originally settled round Baiana. Their distinctive appellation is ascribed to Akbar, to whom they afforded great assistance in the capture of Chitorgarh. The term bareśir appears to be equivalent to Bahadur. They are principally resident in the Fattihabad and Pharrah parganahs, and appear to have come across from Bhartpúr some 200 years ago.

TOMARS.—To this family belonged Anangpal and Pirthí Raj. Upon the dissolution of the Hindu monarchy, the Tomars migrated southwards and settled in various parts of Gwalior.

KACHHWÁHAS.—These claim descent from Kash, the eldest son of Rám. They are traced back to Jaipúr, which now forms their chief seat, and whence they expelled the Mínas and Bargújars.

TARKANS.—The origin of this clan is Brahmanical. It is said that four brothers, Brahmins, who in the time of Raja Tindpal were notorious dacoits, were offered pardon if they would abandon their evil courses. They did so, and, to show their complete severance from their old caste, threw aside (tark kiyá) the Brahmanical thread, and hence their name. They are found chiefly in parganahs Pharrah and Pinahat, and appear to have come from Muttra.

BARGÚJARS.—They claim to belong to the thirty-six royal races, descendants of Lava, Ram's younger son. Their true country is Rajore and Jaipúr. Expelled thence by Kachhwáhas, they sought refuge in Anúpsahar, Rohilkhand, Muttra, Etah, and Aligarh.

RAHTORS.—Originally residents of Jaipúr and Jodpúr, and allied to the Rajas of Kanauj. Relationship to the old Pomar and Sikarwar settlers seems to have drawn them here. In Parganah Khandaulí they have resided some 100 years, while in Kharegarh they scarcely date back beyond the last decade.

DHAKRAHS.—The illegitimate descendants of Súrajbansí Rajputs, the offspring of slave girls. They are said to have come originally from the banks of the Narbadda river, and to have journeyed northwards in search of a livelihood.

INDOLIAS.—This clan, originally from Indore, is but scantily represented here; they mainly appear as zamíndárs and cultivators in the parganah of Khandaulí, but the time of their coming is unknown.

BACHAL.—The original country of this small clan is unknown, but their main residence is in Muttra, Aligarh, Badáon, and Shahjahanpúr.

GEHLOTS.—These are noted as residing chiefly in the parganahs of Fírozabad and Khandaulí, and are said to have been settled here for several hundred years. Members of this clan, from which have proceeded the two great families of Sisodya and Aharya, Rajas of Udaipúr, are dispersed as landholders over almost all parts of these provinces.

JASSÁWATS.—A branch of Jadons, originally residents in Jessalmír and Jaipúr. They are noted as settlers in the parganah of Khandaulí.

BAIS.—This is one of the twenty-six royal races, and from them Baiswara, in Oudh, takes its name. They are scattered in considerable numbers over the whole of the North-Western Provinces, and in this district appear chiefly in the parganah of Khandaulí; but their residence here scarcely dates back beyond the last 100 years.

CHANDELS.—This clan is also now dispersed over the greater part of the north-west. They were originally seated in the province of Chandeli, by the Narbadda, and held a principality there. They have been for several hundred years residents in a few villages in the Khandaulí parganah.

The next three tribes to be noticed are the Khattrís, Kachís, and Játs,—all originally connected with the Chattrí class.

KHATTRÍS are scattered about the district without any special locality, and are said to have immigrated here from Dehli.

KACHÍS.—Descended from the Kachwaha Thakurs by slave girls. They abound throughout the district, and are very old residents; but they seem to have settled especially in Parganahs Khandaulí, Kheragarh, and Pinahat. Those of the latter parganah state that they came from Dholpúr,—and this seems to have been their most recent movement.

JÁTS.—These are said to be the illegitimate descendants of Thakurs and low-caste concubines. Their sub-divisions are numerous, the names of which, equally with those of the Kachí clans, bear testimony to their origin. The fabulous origin assigned to them as sprung from Mahadeo's jattá scarcely merits notice. Most of the clans are represented in this district, and appear to be most conspicuous in the parganahs of Pharrah, Khandaulí, and Fírozabad. They date back many centuries, and appear to have settled here from Aligarh, Muttra, and Bhartpúr.

BANNIAHS.—Representing the third or Vaisya baran. Their sub-divisions are numerous, more or less true in blood. The following are the most prominent here:—

AGARWÁLAS.—Respecting the original seat of this tribe, accounts differ greatly: the most reliable seems to be that which ascribes their name to their residence in Agroha, on the borders of Hariana. In the parganahs of Khandaulí, Pharrah, Hasúr Tehsil, and Kharegarh they appear in great force: in Pharrah some 300, in Kheragarh some 500; in the other parganahs there are not many.

PALLÍWALS.—So called from Palle, in Marwar. These are not thorough Vaisyas, having Birbújar blood in them. In the time of Aláu'd-dín Ghorí (1150 A.D.), they migrated eastwards, and settled in the parganahs of Pharrāh, Khandaulí, Fattihabad, and Pinnahat. From Pharrāh there has recently—some twenty-five years ago—been a movement to Kharegarh.

KANDELWALS.—Mentioned as resident in Parganahs Kharegarh and Pharrāh, whither they came several centuries ago from Bhartpúr.

MAHORS.—Muttra is said to have been the original seat of this clan. They are old residents of the district, and are found in large numbers in all parts except the Kharegarh parganah, where they have only one village. Their settlement appears to have extended over several centuries, and various periods are stated—from 100 to 400 years. They are not true Vaisyas, being descended from a Vaisya by a Chaubey woman.

DILWARÍAS.—This clan is mentioned only in the Pharrāh parganah, where it has settled some 300 years, having migrated from Dehli.

KAYATHS.—The Kayath class occupies an intermediate place, and is variously reckoned as the only representative of the true Súdra caste, and as one of the mixed classes: Mathor, Bhatnagar, Saksena, Siríbast, and Súragdúj, Nigam, Gor, Amisht, Karran, Aitana, Kalsirisht, and Bálmík, severally giving their names to the twelve Kayath clans. Of these, the Bhatnagar, Saksena, Siríbast, and Kalsirisht clans are represented throughout the district, and in large numbers. A few members of the Aitana clan are found in the Pharrāh parganah; as also some Pentálisas, a sub-division of the Mathor Kayaths.

It now remains to notice the most prominent of the mixed classes.

AHÍRS.—Said to have sprung from a Chattrí father and Vaisya mother. Tradition here gives Hariāna as their original seat, but this most probably refers to a sub-division only. Their antiquity is great, "Abhírs" finding mention in the "Rámāyan" and "Mahābhārat." They are found in all parts of the district, and seem to have come mainly from Muttra. Their migration dates back from 200 to 500 years.

KAHÍRS are numerous throughout the district, and have settled at various times.

MALLAHS.—These seem to belong to the old Nishád, or fisher class.

NAHÍRS.—Accounts vary as to the origin of this tribe. They are abundant throughout the district.

BURJÍS.—Their origin is also variously stated.

KÚRMÍS.—Described as the descendants of a slave girl and the illegitimate son of a Chattrí.

GADARIYÁ.—The descendants of an outcast Kúrmí by a concubine. Alienated from the brotherhood, they lived apart in the jungle, gaining a livelihood by grazing herds. Such is one account. Another makes them to be the offspring of a Karan (Kayath?) mother and a Vaisya father; while a third account asserts them to be Gújars, and a fourth Ahírs. The latter explanations have this plausibility, that amongst Gaderiyás, equally with Gújars and Ahírs (and also Játs), there prevails the custom of the younger brother taking to wife the widow of the elder. The time of their settlement here cannot be definitely ascertained, but they are beyond a doubt old residents. Their sub-divisions are manifold, and keep as aloof from one another as if they were distinct castes.

LOHÁRS.—Explained as the descendants of a Kúrmí by a concubine, caste unknown; and again, as merely a sub-division of the Chattrí caste, probably separated from the original stock by the speciality of trade.

KÚMHÁRS.—The offspring of a Brahman's Kahárí concubine by a Súdra. Another account, however, quoted by Colebrooke, makes them descendants of a Brahman and a Chattrí girl. There are three classes, arranged according to their manner of working,—(1) Mathúriya, working by hand; (2) Gola, working by the wheel; and (3) Parodia, toy-makers.

LODAHs.—Of the origin of this tribe also various accounts are given; one making them the descendants of an Ahír by a Chattrí woman, another, of a Chattrí father and low-caste mother. They appear to have come here from Muttra and Bhartpúr some 400 years ago, and are found in the northern parganahs chiefly, being very rare in those of Irádatnagar and Pináhat.

CHAMÁRS.—The most reliable accounts state this tribe to be descended from a Mallah by a Chandál woman; others from a Súdra father and Nishád mother; while another, stated by Colebrooke, makes them the offspring of a Bhangí woman and a Brahman.

KOLÍS.—Descended from a Bais father and a slave girl.

DHÁNUKS.—Descendants of an outcast Ahír and a Chamárí, or, as given by Sir H. Elliot, of a Chamár and a Chandál woman.

A. SELLS, Officiating Deputy Collector.

MAINPURI.

AGARWÁLAS.—Agarwálas are found in the town of Mainpúrí, and also Shekoabad and its immediate neighbourhood. They profess the Jain religion, but are by descent Hindus, and state that they came from Agra or Agroha (supposed to be so called from Agrasen), near Dehli, about 116 years ago.

AHÍRS.—The Ahírs are very numerous throughout the whole district, and are also considerable landholders, more especially in the parganahs of Shekoabad and Mustafabad. Their principal sub-divisions here existing are as follows:—Phatak, Nigana, Jiwariya or Jarwariya, Dhamar, Dunr, Kamariya, Karaiya, Sondele, Rant, Lehngaya, Angere, Bhragade, Badosiya, Malgoraya, Gaindua or Gadua, and Ghosí. All these claim to be Nandbansí except the Phataks, who are really by descent Thakurs, and, like them, have a bad character for female infanticide.

BAIS.—Some Bais Thakurs settled at Bhewar about 250 years ago, in consequence of an intermarriage between a member of their family and the Raja of Mainpúrí, who gave them sixty villages, which they still hold. They are sub-divided into two gots—the Bharadwaja and the Garg, the former being the more numerous.

BHADORIS.—A Brahman caste, found scattered in small numbers here and there. They accept alms from all classes indiscriminately, and are therefore held in very low esteem.

BHÁTS.—The Bháts are Brahmans by descent, though now scarcely reckoned amongst the Brahmanical families.

BRAHMANS.—The principal sub-divisions of Brahmans found in the district are the Sanadh, Gor, Saraswat, Kanaujia, Mathuriya, and Byohra.

BYOHRAS.—All Brahmans of this class are dealers and money-lenders, and so derive their distinctive name. They profess to have come from Marwar and Charn, in Rajputána, about the middle of the last century, and now hold several zamíndáris here.

CHAUHÁNS.—The Chauhán Thakurs are the most numerous and influential class in the district.

CHIRARS (LOCAL NAME, CHOBDARS).—It is said that the Chirars were in occupation of the country when the Chauháns invaded it and dispossessed them.

KAMARIYAS.—The Kamariya Ahírs hold eleven villages in the Mainpúrí, and forty-six in the Mustafabad, parganah.

KACHHWÁHAS.—There is a small settlement of Kachhwáha Thakurs at Devapúra, close to the town of Mainpúrí. They say that their original home was beyond the Chambal.

KAYATHS.—There are twelve families of Kayaths, all of whom claim descent from a certain Chitra Gúpt.

KIRÁRS.—The Kirárs hold thirty-five villages in the Shekoabad parganah, and claim to be a branch of the Jadava Thákurs. They say their great ancestor, Kanwar Pal, invaded the west country and took a strong city called Kirárwar, from which they derive their distinctive name. They settled in the district which they now occupy about 500 years ago. Sada Sakh, Kirár, Zamíndár of Karera, puts in a pedigree beginning with Varadeva, in which Kanwar Pal, alias Karoli Pal, figures as a direct descendant of Krishna; and two of his near descendants, Chattar Pal and Puran Pal, are stated to have settled, the first at Akhrend, the second at Chattarauli, about 1445 Sambat. This is the only date introduced throughout. Wilson, in his Glossary, describes the Kirárs, though with a query at the end of the sentence, as a low tribe, whose occupation is to sell grass and exercise horses, and identifies them with the kiráts (barbarians), the cirrhadæ of the ancients. There can be little doubt that Kirár and kirát are really the same word, but the description above given is much too unfavorable a one for the people answering to the name in this district; and Wilson appears to have overlooked for the moment a passage in “Manu,” x., 43, 44, where the Kiráts are included in a list of Kshatriya castes (so far confirming the local tradition) which have become degraded in consequence of neglecting their proper religious duties.

शनकैस्तु क्रियालोपादिमाः चतुर्विजातयः

वृषलत्वं गता लोके ब्राह्मणादर्शनेन च किराताः

The Kiráts of whom Wilson was thinking are no doubt those mentioned in the “Padma Purana,” with the Nishads, Bhils, Pulindas, etc., as descendants of the dwarf who was supernaturally born of King Vena, and was the embodiment of his sins.

MATHURIYAS.—The Mathuriyas are a class of Chaubey Brahmans who, as their name indicates, have come from Muttra. They say that they first settled in Mainpúri about 300 years ago, and that Chittor was their original home before they moved to Muttra.

RAGHUBANSIS.—Some Raghubansí Thakurs hold three villages in the neighbourhood of Ghiror. They state that they came from Ajudhia in the time of Raja Jaichand of Kanauj.

RATHORS.—The Rathor Thakurs are Surajbansí, and came from Ajudhia in the time of Raja Jaichand. They have a chaurasi in Karraulie which now comprises eighty-eight villages, though some of these have been recently acquired.

PHATAKS.—The Phatak Ahírs hold twenty-one villages in the Shekoabad Tehsílí, and give the following account of their origin:—There was a Raja of Chittor of the Sissodhia line of Rajputs, commonly designated the Kateri Rana. His capital was attacked by the King of Dehli, and, of the twelve gates of the city, one only held out. Therefore, when the invading army had retired, the Raja decreed that the guard of the twelfth gate and their descendants should ever thereafter be distinguished by the name of Phatak. They profess to be actually descended from this Rana by a dola marriage with the daughter of Digpal, Raja of Mahaban, an Ahír, and they are accordingly reckoned among the Ahírs. From this marriage two sons were born, Bijay Singh and Hansraj: the former abandoned his native district, and, with a disorderly band of followers, roamed the country till he came to Samohar, then in the hands of the Mewatís, whom he dispossessed and there established himself about the year 1106 Sambat. The lands in the occupation of their descendants are still called the Samohar chaurasi. The family of Hansraj, the second son, settled at Khat Khera, in the vicinity of Dehli.

SANADHS.—The Sanadhs form one of the largest and most influential Brahman classes in the district, being most numerous in Bhangaon. They are divided into two main lines. The first contains sixteen gots, of which the Sandil, the Gautama, the Vasisht, and the Bharadwaja are the principal here found: they say that they came as the purohīts of the Rathors, first to Rampore, and thence to Bhangaon. The second line comprises three-and-a-half gots. They say they came from Sambhal 400 years ago.

SONARS.—The Sonars of Bhangaon claim to be Thakurs from Kanauj, which locality they profess to have left 1500 or 1600 years ago.

SARAUGIES.—The Saraugies (Jains) are numerous in the town of Mainpúrí. There are two divisions, which have no intercourse with each other, the Saraugie proper, and the Lohiya Saraugie. The latter, so called from the trade which they follow, are considered the inferior. The former have a temple of some antiquity by the Ganesh Darwaza, and the Lohiyas have recently erected a new temple for themselves at very considerable expense. The separation between the two classes would appear to be of recent date.

TANKS.—The Tank Thakurs hold eight villages in the Mainpúrí Tehsílí. They claim to be Jadubansi, and say that they came from Karraulie and Tank, and settled in the village of Kosma, dispossessing the former occupants, who were Brahmans.

THAKURS.—The Thakur classes found in the district are as follows, of which several have already received special mention:—Chauhán, Bargujar, from Gujráť, Kachhwáha, Tank, Raghubansí, Rathor, Jadava, Gor, Bais, Gahlot, Tomar, Dhakara, Bhadauriya, and Baghela.

F. S. GROWSE, Assistant Collector.

ETAWAH.

The early history of Etawah, and that tract of country now included in the district of that name, is involved in the same doubt and obscurity which rests upon everything Indian prior to the commencement of the eleventh century.

The pandits produce ślokes, said to be derived from the “Mahábhárat,” in which the name of Etawah occurs, but these appear to be forgeries; indeed, though there are reasons to believe that the place is of considerable antiquity, and though the current tradition is that Mahmúd of Ghazní* took Etawah after a three days’ fight in 1022–23 A.D., after his unsuccessful attempt to protect his ally, the Raja of Kanauj, nothing authentic is known of its history until towards the close of the twelfth century.

* Though it is not, I believe, the commonly received identification, I have no doubt myself that the famous place of Munj, which Mahmúd destroyed in 1017–18, is no other than the Munj situated in the district, fifteen miles north of Etawah, the size and height of whose khera is almost, if not quite, unequalled in the Doáb. The account of Mahmúd’s marches is confused to a degree in all the Persian histories; but I think that, taken as a whole, the present situation of Munj will suit their narratives as well, if not better, than any other.

Etawah formed part of the antarbed according to later historians, and it seems probable that it was at one time an integral part of the kingdom of Kanauj; but long before our authentic history commences the country (over which the Kings of Dehli then seem to have claimed sovereignty) had ceased, I think, to own even a nominal allegiance to the Rathor Dynasty, and the whole tract seems to have been overrun with Meos, whose turbulent lawlessness had reduced it almost to a wilderness. A time came, however, when two powerful Rajput races—the one from the south and the other from the west—swept over it, and, having exterminated the Meos, founded a number of princely houses, many of which to this day retain the titles, and (notwithstanding our anti-talúkdari policy, so pertinaciously clung to for more than half a century) something of the possessions, of their great ancestors.

Of these two races, the earliest to appear on the scene were the Senghars.

Claiming, like the Gautam Rajputs (well known in Azimgarh, Jaunpúr, Ghazipur, Fattihpúr, etc.), to be descended from Singhí or Siringhí Rish and a daughter of the then monarch of Kanauj, they pretend that their own immediate ancestor, Púrandeo (or Sorandeo, as some have it), son of Padam Rish and grandson of the horned sage, Singhí Rish, having received the tilak from Raja Dulíp of Antar, migrated southwards and established an important kingdom in the Dekkan, or, as most will have it, in Ceylon.

For seventy-two generations the Senghars ruled in the far south, whence, moving to Dhara (Dhar?), for fifty-one more generations their sovereignty remained intact. Thence they appear to have been forced to migrate to Bandhu, whence again, six generations later, they moved to Kanar, a place near Jaggammanpúr. Here it was that, in the 137th generation from Singhí Rish, Raja Bisúkdeo—or Súkdeo, as he is indifferently called,—the founder of the modern fortunes of the Senghar Raj, first saw the light.

I entertain no doubt that he is a real historical personage. His birth in all the kursi-namehs is assigned to the year Sambat 1122, or 1065 A.D.; but I am myself inclined to believe that his birth has been thrown 100 years too far back, and that the correct date would be 1165 A.D.

He married Deokúlah, the daughter of Jay Chand, apparently the Rathor Raja of Kanauj, who in 1194 A.D. was defeated somewhere in the Etawah District by Shahabu'd-dín Ghori, who, it is said, plundered Etawah itself about the same time.

This victory destroyed for ever the great kingdom of Kanauj, and paved the way for the Senghar and Chauhán principalities. Bisúkdeo took possession of the whole of the eastern parts of the present district. His descendants allege that he received it in dower on his marriage with the daughter of the Kanauj Raja, on condition of exterminating the Meos, who were then ravaging the whole country. But this seems scarcely likely, since at the time of his marriage the kings of Dehli claimed sovereignty over this tract, and had made, about the time of the famous battle of Tiraúrí, a grant of a portion of it to their own employés.

In 582 H., or 1186 A.D., one Udaikarn, of Ajúdhia (a Sribastam Kayath of the Dúsera division), presented himself at the Court of Pirthí Raj as an aspirant to the royal favor. Proving himself both brave and clever, he was sent with a force to Phapund to reduce the Meos to order; and in A.D. 1191 received a formal sannad conferring on him a jaghír of Rs. 50,000, with the title of Chaudhrí.

Then came the destruction of the Dehli Raj in 1193 A.D., and of that of Kanauj in 1194 A.D., after which both the Kayath and the Senghar appear to have obtained the favor of the conqueror. Poker Dass, Udaikarn's son, was confirmed in his father's jaghír and title, with the addition of being nominated hereditary Kanúngo of the shag of Phapund, with further emoluments; while Bisukdeo and his sons obtained firm hold of the whole of the rest of the eastern half of the district.

Of the Kayaths, Chaudhrí Ganga Pershád, of Búrhedanna and Umrí, Talúdkar and Honorary Magistrate, still (with branches of his family) hold nearly the same villages they obtained in grant some 650 years ago; while the Rajas of Bharrai, Jaggammanpúr, Ruru, Sakkat, and all the multitudinous "Ruá," "Rawat," and "Kúnr" kinsmen, holding some 300 to 400 villages between them, sufficiently maintain the name and position of their great ancestor.

It was somewhat later than the advent of the Senghars that the Chauhán Raja, Sumersa (grandson of Hamír Shah, killed at the taking of Rattambúr in 1230 A.D., by Altamsh), with his two brothers, the founders of the Rajore and Mainpúri Dynasties—all being sons of Raja Uram Rao, and great-great-grandsons of Pirthí Raj,—made their way from Nímrana to this part of the country; when Samer Shah with his Chauhán followers and friends took possession of the whole of the western portion, as the Senghars already had of the eastern portion, of the district. This I take to have occurred somewhere about 1266 A.D., and I gather that the Chauháns obtained a certain amount of countenance from Ghyasu'd-dín, in consideration of their having aided to exterminate the Meos, who were then, as ever, the very bête noirs of all regular administration.

From this stem the Rajahs of Pertabnír and Chakkernagar, the Rana of Sikrorí, the Raos of Jassohan and Kisní, and other princely houses, sprang, and though they probably no longer hold more than a fifth at most of the 1,122 villages over which Sumersa once exercised regal authority, the Chauháns are still the dominant race of the west, as the Senghars are of the east, of the Etawah District.

But though the Chauháns and Senghars are, and have been for fully 600 years, the ruling races here, it must not be supposed that these are the only castes, or even the only Rajputs, who deserve our notice. Before the Senghars, the Gaur Thakurs in the north-east, and, after the advent of the Chauháns, the Bhadauriás in the west, were in their turns powerful, and have left till this day representatives in many village communities.

The Gaurs belong to those dim middle ages in which nothing can be distinguished with certainty. According to their own traditions, they migrated from Sopar in the west as early as 650 A.D., and took up their head-quarters at Parsú, reclaiming much of the surrounding country from the everlasting Meos, whom everybody was always conquering, without, it must be confessed, their appearing much the worse for it.

In about 1000 A.D. the Gaur Thakurs were, they assert, in great force in that tract of country now known as Phapund, Akbarpúr, Oreyah, Rassúlabad, and Dera Mangalpúr parganahs, having their head-quarters at Malhausie, and founding fifty-two (bawan) gharís, amongst which Phapund, Umrí, Búrhedana, and many others later granted to the Kayath Chaudhrís, are enumerated. Who exactly Allah and Udal (the worthy Rajas of Mahoba whose prowess is sung to this day at the commencement of the rains by all the minstrels and peasants of the Central Doáb) may chance to have been, and whether they were men or myths, the works of reference at my command do not enable me to decide; but it is to those doughty warriors—but specially the matchless archer, Udal—that the Gaur Thakurs ascribe their defeat and ruin at the very commencement of the twelfth* century. Elsewhere they again, on various occasions, rose into importance, but here they never regained their lost supremacy, though their descendants to this day continue to hold Sahail, Karchalla, Jaura, and other villages in this and the Cawnpore Districts.

The Bhadauriás on the west, whose head-quarters are in the Bah Pinahat parganah of the Agra District, claim, as is well known, great antiquity, and are (owing to the favour in which they stood in the later times of the Mahomedan Emperors, which are least forgotten) allowed precedence by the Chauháns of Manchhana (or Mainpúrí) and Pertabnír; but in reality these Bhadauriás were of no importance when the great Chauhán houses were founded hereabouts, and only rose into notice when the Chauháns of Etawah had been for nearly 400 years the rulers of the whole country round about. It was during the time of Shahjahan and his successors that the Bhadauriás (always a troublesome and disreputable set) obtained a permanent hold, which they still retain on much of the Chauhán territory.

Mingled with the Bhadauriás are a few communities of Dhakera Rajputs, who appear to have migrated hither from the direction of

* How they reconcile this early date with the alleged fact that Udal married a daughter or sister of Jaichand of Kanauj, I cannot pretend to say. Everyone knows Udal's story,—how as a boy he broke the Kahari's ghara; and how, taunted by her, he went and recovered his father's skull; his loves, his conquests, and his sad fate—are they not told in all our chronicles? One such contains nearly 1,000 pages of close manuscript, solely devoted to Udal and his family. But for all that, I am by no means convinced that he and his exploits are not pure myths, and that his whole story, as originally told, was not a semi-religious fable. If he was a man, and not a myth, the story of his marrying Jaichand's daughter need give no trouble. Every family who ever married in old days into any Rathore family of Kanauj now give out that their ancestor married Jaichand's daughter. Probably it may have been one of his great-grandfather's chobdar's daughters; but this is all the same to them.

Ajmír early in the sixteenth century, and to have early joined themselves with the Bhadauriás. For nearly two centuries they bore a reputation as robbers and cut-throats second only to that of their prototypes, the Meos, and to this day they are, I think, the least respectable of our village communities.

In the east, again, where this district marches with that of Cawnpore, a good many of the Gahlor—or, as it is sometimes written, Gahlot—Thakurs are to be found. The head-quarters of this clan, hereabouts at least, is Parganahs Rassúlabad and Tirúa Thattia, Zillah Farrakhabad. They profess to have made their way, about 1400 A.D., from Muttra and Dehli, to assist Sultan Mahmúd Taghlak in maintaining order in and about Kanauj, and to have received the 600 villages they still profess to hold in reward for their services. That they obtained their present holdings about the time that that most blood-thirsty ruffian, Tamerlane, had reduced the whole of Upper India to a state of anarchy is, I deem, probable enough; but although Mahmúd Taghlak was residing for a short time at Kanauj, it was as a mere refugee, and I doubt whether he ever attempted to keep order anywhere, or possessed any power to reward allies. I suspect by “their own good swords they won those lands,” as certainly later “by those same swords they kept them.”

A considerable number of Parihar Thakurs are to be found in that portion of the district south of the rivers Kúarí and Chambal, known as the Talúka Sandús. Inhabiting, as these people have done, that intricate and inaccessible net-work of ravines that abuts on the Panchnaddí (as the confluence of the Jamna, Chambal, Sindé, Koarí, and Pahúj is here termed), they have ever been a peculiarly lawless and desperate community.

The great ancestor of these Parihars was Belan Deo. From him, in the seventh generation, descended Nahir Deo, one of whose fourteen sons, Paup Singh, founded this particular clan, who were then located in Biana, Zillah Amritpúr. Very early in the eleventh century, and consequent on (though why consequent, none can explain) the defeat of Anang Pal by Mahmúd of Ghazní, Samit Rai, the then surviving head of the house, fled to Sandús and colonized the country thereabouts, which his clan still continue to occupy.

The Kachhwáhas are also represented in this district. The Kaurs of Bailah were once rather important landholders, and, with their numerous kinsmen, still hold Bailah itself and a few other villages.

The Kachhwáhas appear to have emigrated at an early period from Gwalior or its neighbourhood to that tract of country now known as Kachhwáhi Ghar. Thence in 1656 A.D. came one Ajab Singh, who took service with the then Raja of Ruru, and later, through his master's influence, obtained possession of Bailah and other villages. Besides this family, there are a good number of this caste (all emigrants from Kachhwáhi Ghar) sprinkled here and there about the eastern parganahs of this district.

To return, the Rajput races were the pioneers, but with them and after them came tribes of Brahmans, as pandits, purohits, and pújaris, who soon obtained villages or portions of villages as maáfis, or as subsistence provisions, from their warlike patrons.

Throughout this district, if we except the Oreyah parganah, the Kanaujias are in majority. A very considerable proportion of these belong to the Dúbai division (or got); and one celebrated Dúbai, Shivanath, is recorded as having accompanied Raja Sumersa when he first established himself in Etawah. Throughout the north-east of the district Kanaujias abound, but all admit that they only came by degrees, finding their way one by one to the courts of the Senghar chieftains, from whom they obtained grants of lands, and whose rights they in many cases usurped in the course of time.

In the centre of the district, for some reason, there always remained a broad belt of debateable land between the Senghars and the Chauháns, and in this neutral ground, about 1500 A.D., appeared two Kanaujia Brahmans, Dhun and Mun (query, should these be Dhan and Man?), born, it was said, at Nandhaha, near Bithúr. These soon possessed themselves peacefully of a very considerable tract of country.

In the Oreyah parganah (which is not generally known), the Sanaurias or Sanadhs predominate, and are represented chiefly by Singías and Merhas, two well-known gots of that sub-family. There are a considerable number of Singía* Brahman zamíndárs, and these all date their origin from one Basdeo. According to them their ancestor first settled at Sabhda under the protection of the Senghars, and then one of his sons went to Dehli, where he obtained service late in Shahabu'd-dín Ghorí's reign.

* The Singías are also called Gargia Chaubeys. They say that Garga Cháraj, Sri Krishen's guru, belonged to their family. Their name is derived, they allege, from that of their native country—a tract near Dehli, which was once known as Singhi.

They are probably in error in dating their advent so far back as 1200 A.D., but they are unquestionably one of the first of the Brahman septs now existing that settled in the district.

The Merhas profess to have been from early times the family priests or the Senghar Raj of Bharrai.

In the Etawah parganah, besides the gradual influx of Kanaujias, two distinct immigrations of other Brahmans are noticeable as having to this day left numerous representatives.

Very early in the fourteenth century, when Alau'd-dín took Rantampúr, Chitorgarh, and other places, one Harripant, a famous pandit, made his way to Etawah. With him came Ugarsen, Mathúria, and others of that sub-division of the Sanaurias. Ugarsen's two sons, Radho and Madho, rose to more or less importance, and at this present moment their descendants of the twelfth, thirteenth, and fourteenth generation, as well as the descendants of their father's companions, are to be found almost throughout the Etawah parganah.

Another and far more important sept of Sanaurias are the "Sabarn" Chaudhrís of Manikpúr. Their ancestors, it is generally allowed, accompanied Raja Sumersa on his first settlement in the district, and from him obtained the title of Chaudhrí and a grant of several villages.

In later times they possessed, it is said, a chaurasi of villages.

Of the Kayat or writer class, besides the important Phapund family already noticed, a considerable number are to be found in the Etawah parganah. Of these the most noticeable are the Ayara family (Suksenai Kayats of the Pardhan ál), whose ancestor, an inhabitant of Kanauj, migrated to Etawah after Raja Jaichand's death, and when Sumersa took possession of Etawah, entered his service.

Besides these, there are the Chakwa and Parasna Kayats, to whose family belonged the famous Raja Nawal Rai, whom the Nawab Bangash killed. These are Suksenai Kharrai. Again, there are the Ekdill Kayats, Suksenai, Dúsera, and others, whose ancestors were one and all followers or servants of the Chauhán Rajas.

For traders the Etawah District has never been famous. Inaccessible ravines, dense jungles, and the unchecked rule of virtually independent petty Thakur chieftains were not elements conducive to the rapid development of commerce.

About 400 years ago one Mota Mal, a Khatrí of Jalaun, settled in the old city, and there, with a number of relatives and kinsmen, grew to importance. He built a magnificent residence—one might almost call it a palace—which still, though ruined (and all its best marble and stonework long since sold away by his numerous pauper descendants), attest the builder's wealth and taste.

Of the humbler traders or Banniahs scattered everywhere about the district, a large proportion are Aggarwallas. These Aggarwallas are said by Elliot to derive their name from Agroha, on the borders of Hariana; but I believe that this statement is incorrect, as by all tradition, written and oral, they are descended from a person named Augar, or Ugar. According to some accounts he was a Brahman saint, Augar Rikhisúr; while others call him a Kshatriya Raja, Ugar Sen. Be this as it may, he had seventeen sons, whom he married to the seventeen daughters of Basuk Deota, King of the Nagas.

The descendants of these Nág-kannies, or snake-daughters, were called Aggarwallas, and these comprise to this day seventeen gots,* named after Augar's seventeen sons. Those snake-ladies brought with them a number of slaves, and the descendants of these were called Dassa, to this day a well-known though inferior race of Banniahs. How these Aggarwallas, descendants of saints or monarchs, came to sink into the position they have ever occupied within the historical period, is, I think, easy of explanation. Admitting, as is now unquestionable, that these serpent-kings, of whom we hear so much, were nothing more than the chieftains of tribes of invaders whose birthplace was beyond the Himalayas, Scythians, as Elliot calls them, and concurring with Elphinstone that any considerable admixture of the blood of these barbarians in the pure Rajput stocks is highly improbable,—I believe that many of the inferior castes, and amongst others the Aggar-walla Banniahs, the Kayats, the Gújars, and the Játs, originated in marriages between males of the pure Brahman and Rajput stocks and females of the later hordes of invaders. The subject, however, is one which I cannot here discuss further.

* Viz., Garag, Gotal, Basal, Nayal, Tandal, Metal, Sangal, Mangal, Gon, Chaudan, Abarn, Dhabaran, Kusal, Gangal, and three others which I have never been able to find out.

Then we have the Jameya Banniahs, of whom there are a good many in Oreyah, and who are remarkable as having until quite recently always buried their dead, whom they now place on a mat and fling into a river. They claim descent from Pahlad, son of Hiranya Kasyap, but they take their name from Jameya, their more immediate progenitor, who, abandoning the "panth" or sect of Hiranya Kasyap, became initiated in the worship of Bishen (or Vishnu), and prescribed the same to his descendants. Like others of the trading and laboring classes, their advent to this part of the country seems to have been subsequent to the comparative restoration of order under the Rajput chieftains. Besides these Jameya Banniahs, there are the Gaharwár, Gahore, Didhomra, and Púrwar, or Ajúdiahbasís, and others, whose traditions, though useful in discussing the general question of the origin of the inferior castes, would be too tedious to dwell on here. And lastly, before concluding this passing notice of our traders, we are bound to name the Marwarís—commercial adventurers—of many castes, who, second to none in enterprise and industry, periodically seek in these provinces the fortunes they generally return to spend in their distant homes in Marwar.

Hitherto we have considered only the Hindu races, and the truth is that ours is an essentially Hindu population, amongst which here and there a few Mahomedans only have been permitted to find homes. Not as conquerors or rulers, for the most part came the Mahomedans to Etawah: nature had so fortified the Rajput principalities here that neither Shah nor Nawab ever ventured to interfere much with them, though in course of Akbar's time the whole was duly included in the subah of Agra, under the dastúrs of Etawah, Bhaugáon, and Kalpí.

In early times the whole northern half of the district was traversed from west to east by a portion of that broad ten-kos belt of dhák jungle, which—though now in many localities replaced by cultivation, and everywhere greatly diminished in breadth, is still to be traced through the Mírat, Bulandshahr, Aligarh, Etah, Mainpúrí, Etawah, and Cawnpore Districts—was once a dense continuous and jungle forest.

The whole of the south of the district was, and indeed still is, a network of terrible ravines (then everywhere densely wooded), fringing throughout their whole course the Jamna, Chambal, and Kúarí rivers. Lastly, right through the centre of the district runs the Senghar, which for the last thirty miles of its course here is bordered on either side by a belt of ravines, in many places several miles in breadth. These latter ravines, even up to a recent date, were so densely clothed with khair,* rewaj,† chenkar,‡ babul,§ and others of this thorny race, that it was difficult in many places for even a single footman to thread his way amongst them; and all tradition leads us to believe that in past times the Jamno-Chambal ravines were no less densely clad.

It is therefore no matter of surprise that, close as Etawah was to the capital of the great Mahomedan Emperors, the Hindus always contrived to hold their own, so that we have but few, and these but little important, Mahomedan families to chronicle here.

Phapund and Etawah alone have any Mahomedans. To Phapund, early in the sixteenth century, from Jaunpúr, came Sayyid Yusuf, a native of Bokhara, known to us now as Shah Jaffer Bokharí. With this good man came his brother, Sayyid Tayab, and his family; and this latter's descendants are now the leading Mahomedans of Phapund. About the same time appeared also at Phapund one Baba Sejhanand, who is said to have been born in Totadarí, near Ajmír; and with this Baba the Bokharí contracted the strongest friendship. Both Sejhanand and Shah Jaffer, who died in 956 Hijrí,|| left a name for goodness and sanctity, revered alike by Hindu and Musulman,—and flowers are sprinkled, lamps are lit, and snow-white sheets are still spread upon the Mahomedan's tomb at festivals by the pious of both creeds; while the great fair of Shah Bokharí, held yearly at it to this day, shows how long and brightly "good deeds shine out upon this naughty world," and how, even in the darkest ages and amongst the most ignorant people, a career of pure unselfish piety and good works will conquer sectarian prejudices, and live to distant generations in the hearts of multitudes, who, though they will not imitate, can at least admire, its virtues.

In Etawah we have two families or clans of Mahomedans. The first

* Acacia Catechu.

† Acacia Lencophlæa.

‡ Acacia Trispinosa.

§ Acacia Arabica.

|| The date is on his tomb.

are Shaikhs, who, emigrating from Bagdad, settled in Dehli in Chengiz Khan's time, early in the thirteenth century, and thence in the time of the Emperor Akbar (whose sannads they retain to this day) moved to Etawah, of which they became the hereditary kazís, although they never appear to have become landholders. The other clan are Sayyids, whose progenitor, Sayyid Jabba, of the Barah Sadat, obtained in Faruksír's time a small grant of land in Etawah from the Vizier Abdulla, who, as is well known, belonged to the same famous Sayyid stock.

There still remain the inferior castes, of whom in this district the Ahírs, Chamárs, Kachís, and Lodhís are perhaps the most noticeable and most important. Of the origin* of these, or the times at which they first occupied the district in considerable numbers, nothing can be said with certainty.

Looking back through the dim vista of receding ages, we seem to discern traces of a time when the Etawah District was widely different from anything it has ever been within the historic period: a time when population was very dense, and when arts long since forgotten, and a religion now unknown, grew and flourished everywhere about the district. Even in the midst of barren plains, ancient sites † of considerable magnitude, and in some instances extraordinary height, attest the importance and antiquity of the towns under which they once slowly grew. Fragments of a highly glazed and ornamental pottery, such as in Asia is now scarcely produced anywhere out of China, and portions of sculpture, which even now, weather-beaten by unnumbered seasons, are almost Grecian in the purity of their design, from time to time crop up—mute records of arts and civilization, such as in the last thousand years have found no parallels here. Even the principal mosque in Etawah itself is nothing ‡ but a modified Buddhist temple, to which it is impossible to assign a later date than the fifth century of our era.

* From such scraps of tradition as I have at various times collected from the people and from native books, modern and ancient, I hope some day to be able to show good grounds for believing that most of the more important of the lower castes spring from unions between the males of the higher castes and females of the aboriginal inhabitants of the country, or in some cases (and these are the most respected of the lower castes) the females of the so-called Scythian races.

† Known as kheras.

‡ I was the first to point this out, and even now it is not generally known.

Some great calamity then devastated the country. War and pestilence may have contributed; but there are nowhere the faintest traces of irrigating channels—water is very far from the surface, and it is to one of those terrible famines to which this part of the Doáb is peculiarly liable that I myself am inclined to attribute the change.

The next glimpse we catch of the country—it is almost tenantless, a straggling wilderness, overrun with scattered hordes of robber savages; then came that widely-extended reflex movement of the southern Rajput tribes towards the north and north-east, which, commencing long before the earliest important Mahomedan invasion, has never, I think, been adequately explained. Other tribes doubtless preceded them, of whom even such faint traces as we have of the Gor occupation no longer remain to us; but the first to obtain a lasting footing here were the Senghars' and Chauháns' bold hearts and strong arms, before whom the plunderers soon melted away. Once more something like protection to life and property is afforded: the Brahmans come with science, such as it is, and all that still remains to them of a declining civilization; agriculture becomes possible; herds multiply in something like security; commerce and banking spring up to aid the distribution of growing wealth, and the Tatars, Mughals, and Mahrattas have successively held nominal sway, and exercised a more or less real authority over them.

BRAHMANS.—I note, though it is probably so perfectly well known as to require no repetition, that Brahmans are divided into two great classes—the Panch Gor, who reside north, and the Panch Dravira, who reside south, of the Vindiyachal mountains.

The Gor contains five great families:—1, Sarasút; 2, Kankubj; 3, Gor; 4, Maithal; 5, Utkal.

The Dravira contains five other great families:—1, Tailang; 2, Drawar; 3, Maharasht; 4, Karnatic; 5, Gújar. These do not intermarry, I believe.

The Kankubj, with whom chiefly we are concerned in these provinces, contains five sub-families:—1, Sanauria, or Sanadh; 2, Kanaujia; 3, Jijhotia; 4, Bhúínhár; 5, Sarwaria. These do intermarry.

The Kanaujias, again, comprise sixteen divisions and 104 gots; and similarly each of the sub-families include a vast number of divisions and gots. No two authorities agree as to these, and some years ago, after recording some hundreds, I came to the conclusion that these distinctions were of no value. Doubtless, however, Brahmans of the same gots cannot intermarry. The distinction of gots had their origin in the jágs and oms performed by their ancestors and founders.

KAYATHS.—These, as is well known, claim descent from Chandar, or Chittor Gupt, who had two wives and twelve sons, each of whom was founder of a separate clan. There ought, therefore, now to be only twelve such clans, but a thirteenth has been somehow introduced, and the Kayaths are always said to contain twelve and a half families. These are—1, Mathur; 2, Bhatnagar; 3, Sríbast or Sríbastam; 4, Suksena; 5, Kalserisht; 6, Negam; 7, Gor; 8, Súraj-thúg; 9, Amisht; 10, Aithana; 11, Balmek; 12, Karan; 12½, Unais.

These cannot intermarry, but each of these are divided, first, in great sub-divisions, as the Sríbast into (a) Kharai, (b) Dúsera; and all these sub-divisions into innumerable áls, the members of each ál being unable to marry in their own ál, or out of their own great family.

O. A. HUME, C.B., Collector.

ETAH.

Out of a population of 614,351 souls, there are 71,662 Chamárs and 10,900 Kolís.

It is not known from what part of the country the Chamárs came, but it is possible that they have settled here on account of the leather trade. They are sub-divided into seven classes—viz., Jatúa, Kaien, Kúrah, Jaiswar, Jhosia, Azimgarhía and Kúrís.

AHÍRS AND AHIRS.—Of these there are 63,193.

LODHAS.—Of whom there are 58,758 souls in this district. They are chiefly to be found in the parganahs of Etah and Marehra; they hold zamíndarí in this district, and are old inhabitants. There are six sub-divisions of caste amongst them, viz., Pataria, Mathuria, Sankallajaria, Lakhia, Kharia, and Pania. The Pataria caste abounds in Etah, and came from the west—the districts of Aligarh and Dehli. Atranj-kherah is an ancient seat of the Lodhas. Lodhas are said to have come from the hills.

THAKURS.—Of these there are 53,132. The principal tribe of Thakurs, inhabitants of this country, are Chauhán, Rathors, Solankhí, Tomars, Kattíar, Bais, Dhakre, Powar, Jadon, Bhatalai (or Bamtalai), Bargújars, Pondair, Goraher, Jaiswar, Kattia, Gor, Kachhwáha, Ragh-bansí, and Jais.

CHAUHÁN.—These Rajputs or Thakurs trace their origin from the neighbourhood of Sambhar and Ajmír; they came into this district from that quarter and Dehli.

RATHORS.—This is a very old tribe of the Thakurs.

SOLANKHÍS.—They first came into this district from Gujrát, some say Tonk.

SONKHÍS.—A branch of the Solankhís, and are to be found in Eklehra and Garhía.

TOMARS.—The famous Pandús are said to have been of the Tomar caste. Their original country was Hastnapúr, Indar Prast, or Dehli.

KATTÍARS.—They are only to be found in Parganah Azimnagar, and they came into this part of the country from Jallandhar.

KATTIAS.—They are only to be found in Parganah Azimnagar. They came likewise from Jallandhar.

BAIS.—They are to be found only in Parganah Nidhpúr. They say that they came from Daondía Khera, in Baiswara (Oudh), and belong to the royal race.

DHAKRAIS.—A tribe of Rajputs who are now to be found in Mauzahs Sún drain and Meholí, Parganah Nidhpúr.

PANARIERS.—They are to be found in Parganah Azimnagar.

JADÚNS.—The Raja of Awa and the Zamíndár of Rústamgarh are of this tribe. The Raja of Awa holds zamíndarí in Parganahs Marehra, Etah, Sonhar, Azimnagar, Patialí, and Soron.

BHATAILIAS.—They are to be found in Mauzah Mogarra Tatyí, Parganah Nidhpúr. They came from across the Ganges.

BARGÚJARS.—They are to be found in Ujhaipúr and Nandgáon, in Parganah Sakkít.

PUNDÍRS.—They are said to have come from Hardwar some 1100 years ago, and hold zamíndarí in the Balgram Parganah, Tehsíl Kass-ganj, Ulayí Khass, Indrayí, and Jaitpúra.

GARHAHERS, OR GAURAHERS.—An obscure tribe of the Rajputs found in the Parganahs of Pachlana, Badria, and Bilram. They are said to have come from Ajmír some 225 years ago.

JAIWAR, OR JAIS are to be found only in Parganah Azimnagar, and they are stated to have come from Jaisalmír or Jagnair, while Sir H. Elliot mentions they came from Kasba Jais, in Oudh.

GAURS.—A royal race of Rajputs—the ancient Kings of Bengal were of the Gaur caste. They came from the east of Kashi (Benares). Barhola and Sanorí are their zamíndarí villages. They are sub-divided into Bhat Gaur, Brahman Gaur, and Chamár Gaur. Barhola zamíndars are Brahman Gaurs, while the Barona zamíndars are Chamár Gaurs.

KACHHWÁHAS.—Akbarpúr, Tamraura, and Sikandarpúr are the abode of Kachhwáha Thakurs.

RAJBANSÍS.—To be found in Nidhpúr Parganah.

BRAHMANS.—There are 53,132 souls, principally Sanadhhs.

KACHÍS.—They are sub-divided into Kanaujia, Hardía, and Suksena.

GADABÍAS.—Of these there are 21,479.

BANNIAHS.—Of these, 15,412 are in this district.

MAHAJANS.—There are 12,907.

KISAUNS.—There are 11,966.

BARHÍS.—They are probably aborigines.

KAISTHS OR KAITHS.—The Suksenas are original inhabitants of San-kesah, near Serai Agath, in this district, and this district may be said to be their native country. Other sub-divisions are—

KULSHIRISTS.—From Oudh, thence to Jallaisar and Shekoabad, and in this district.

SRÍBASTAMS.—Came from Oudh, Khairabad, and Gonda. Sríbastam Suksena, and Kulshirist hold zamíndarí.

C. H. T. CROSTHWAITE, Deputy Collector.

JALAU.

The principal castes of this district are:—1, Kachhwáha Rajputs; 2, Senghar Rajputs; 3, Gújars; 4, Kúrmís; 5, Brahmans; 6, Mah-ratta Pandits.

The Kúrmís hold 107 villages.

Next in this district come the Brahmans: they hold 198 villages; the Gújar caste have 105 villages; the Kachhwáha Thakurs hold 84 villages; and the Senghars 62 villages.

It will be remarked that, though this district is considered in Bundel-khand, yet the Búndelá clan only have three villages.

KACHHWÁHA THAKURS.—The Kachhwáha Thakurs, who inhabit the north-western part of the district, situated on the banks of the Pahuj and Jumna, are represented by the Raja Mansingh, of Rámpúr. A branch of the same clan is the Raja of Gopalpúr, another jaghirdar. The Raja of Sikrí is also of the same clan.

SENGHAR RAJPUTS.—The Senghar clan holds many villages in the north-eastern part of the district, near the banks of the Jumna. Their representative is the Raja of Jaggammanpúr.

GÚJARS.—The Gújars state they came from the west of India. The principal Gújar families are Dhantolí, Hardoí, and Babye; but none are of any note, or hold large estates.

MAHRATTA PANDITS.—The first appearance in these parts of the Mahratta Pandits was on cession to the Peshwah in A.D. 1726, by Chattersal, of a large tract of land containing 3,481 villages, given in payment of assistance rendered against the Nawab of Farrakhabad, who had invaded this part of the country.

KÚRMÍS.—The Kúrmís, although playing a most important part as agriculturists, hold no influential position. The same remark as to position applies to Ahírs, and all the inferior castes. A native tradition exists that this district, anterior to the conquest by Chattersal Búndelá, was entirely held by the Meo caste, an inferior clan of Rajputs.

A. H. TERNAN, LT.-COL., Deputy Commissioner.

JHANSI.

Very little can be said in this district on the subject regarding which the Board have called for information. There are no records or sannads extant, and, as a rule, the people have no traditions of their own histories. There are no large colonies of Rajputs or other well-known castes, and no tract or portion of the district is occupied by any one particular tribe. Here and there may be found the scattered members of the same family, but with very few exceptions there is no one family holding more than two or three villages.

There have never been any inducements to settle in this part of the country. There are, indeed, signs of its having been a prosperous and well-populated country in the time of the Chandels; but since their expulsion (probably about 850 years ago) the country has been overrun and held by different conquerors, and the people have been badly governed, and were, when the English took possession of the district, very much reduced in numbers, and generally wretchedly poor.

The castes which exist in the greatest numbers in this district stand, as regards numbers, in the following order:—

1. Brahmans	46,818
2. Chamárs	36,566
3. Kachhís	31,772
4. Koerís and Khushtahs	24,202
5. Ahírs	23,274
6. Rajputs	15,847
7. Garereahs	15,232
8. Kúrmís	13,150
9. Búndelás	10,507
10. Lodhís	10,420
11. Kangars	8,592
12. Káyaths	7,889

SAHEREAHS.—These people are said to be Gonds; they live in the jungles in the southern part of the district: they are no doubt the aborigines of this part of the country. They are very wild in their habits, and look more like monkeys than men. They have no traditions, and can give no information about themselves.

CHANDELS (Rajputs).—These number only ninety-four in this district.

KANGARS.—These people are said to be one of the many castes who owe their origin to Bishwa Karma, a Brahman, and Ganashí, a woman of low caste. They say that they settled here about 650 years ago, but this is not at all certain. It is most probable that, taking advantage of the misrule and disorder which prevailed after the great victory gained by Pirthí Ráj over the Chandels, they invaded and took possession of a large portion of this district; for when the Búndelás came they found the Kangars rulers of nearly all the tract of country which lies between the Dassan Naddí and the River Pahuj. They had in those days their capital at a place called Kúrar, about seventeen miles from Jhansi. They are like the Bhars in the Jaunpúr, Benares, and Mirzapúr Districts, who also were rulers once of that part of the country—the thieves and chaukídars of the district.

BÚNDELÁS.—These men, as well as those of the Dhandelás and Ponwar castes, are spurious Rajputs. They are sprung from the Gaharwárs, one of the thirty-six Rajput tribes. They came from Kantit and Khairaghar in the Mirzapúr District. They were probably forced to emigrate and come westwards by the pressure caused by the Mahomedan invasion of the Doáb and Oudh, and the colonization of Oudh and the Jaunpúr, Azimgarh, and Benares Districts by the Rajputs, who were driven eastwards by the Mahomedans. They conquered Bundelkhand at the commencement, I believe, of the thirteenth century, but it is impossible to fix the exact date.

DHANDELÁS (spurious Rajputs).—I have not been able to find out how or when they lost caste. They intermarry with the Búndelás and Ponwars. They say that they settled here 700 years ago, and that they are descended from Dhandhú, one of the officers in the army of Pirthí Raj. There are only 353 of them in this district.

PONWARS (spurious Rajputs: see above).—They settled here after the conquest of the country by the Búndelás, about 400 years ago.

PARIHÁRS (Rajputs).—The head of this family lives at Jigní—an independent State on the right bank of the Dassan river—and the clan hold twenty-seven villages in this and the Hamírpúr District, and in adjoining Native States. Those in this district are descended from Gobindeo and Sarangdeo, the grandsons of the head of the family, Raja Jújhar Singh. They were here long before the Búndelá conquest, probably in the time of the Chandels. They came no doubt from Marwar, of which country the Parihárs were in possession up to the commencement of the twelfth century.

KHATTÍS (Rajputs).—There are now only sixty-five of this tribe in this district.

SAINGAR (Rajput).—These number 409. They came from Jagmohanpúr, on the Jumna, about 300 years ago.

BAIS (Rajputs).—These number 710. They came from Dúndea Khera in Oudh. Like all other Bais, they state they are true Tilok Chandí Bais, and are descended from the great Raja Salbahan, the conqueror of Raja Bikramajít, of Ujjain. They settled here probably at the close of the fifteenth, or at the commencement of the sixteenth, century.

GAUR (Rajputs).—Say they came from Indurkhí, Scindiah's territory (formerly in the Jalaun District), 300 years ago.

DHANGÍS.—These men assert they are descended from Lav, one of the sons of Raja Ramchand, and that they came here from Narwar, in Scindiah's territory, 900 years ago.

MARWARÍS.—These are the money-lenders in this district.

GÚJARS.—This tribe numbers in this district 3,860.

KOERÍS AND KHUSHTAHS.—These are the weavers in this part of the country. They are in great numbers in the towns of Mau, Erick, Gúrserai, and Bhandere. They number 24,202. The Koerís came, so they say, from Benares some 700 years ago, and the Khushtahs from Chandairí (a place renowned for its silk manufactures) 600 years ago; but I do not think it likely that they have been here so long. The Koerís make Kharúa and other cotton goods, while the Khushtahs make silk articles only. The Koerís assert that they are descended from Bishwa Karma, a Brahman, and Ganashí, a woman of inferior caste.

JÁTS.—The number of this tribe in this district is 350. They say that their ancestor was born from the matted hair (jaṭá) of Mahadeo—hence their name. They settled in this district about 700 years ago, and came from Gohad, a place in Scindiah's territory, about twenty-five miles north-east of Gwalior.

KÚRMÍS.—These people state that they emigrated from the south 1200 years ago.

LODHÍS say they came from Narwar, in Scindiah's territory, 1000 years ago. They have a tradition that they originally came from Lúdíaná, in the Panjáb.

KACHHÍS.—These people also assert that they came from Narwar 1000 years ago. They claim descent from the Kachhwáha Rajputs.

It is a matter of great difficulty—indeed, it is next to impossible—to trace out the origin of the numerous castes and sub-divisions of castes; but it will be found that there were two great causes which led to these sub-divisions,—the one, the marriages of men of higher with women of inferior caste; and the second, the adoption by some member of the family of a particular profession. Originally there were very few castes; but caste in India became a social usage, and anyone becoming an outcast, or withdrawing himself from his own caste, found himself compelled to institute a new caste or sub-division of caste. Thus the Kachhís ascribe their origin to the union of a Rajput and a woman of a lower caste. The Koerís and the Khangars claim descent from Bishwa Karma, a Brahman, and Ganashí, a woman of low caste.

The Garereahs take their name from their occupation—gádar (गडार) being the Hindí for sheep. So also do the Lohars, Sonars, Chípás, Mochís, Baraies, Chamárs, and Rangrez. The Ahírs are divided into two castes (there are, I believe, no Yadbansís here)—the Nand Bans and the Guálá. The Nand Bans, again, have several sub-divisions. The Guálás are named after their ancestor, Guál, who some say was a Bakal; at any rate the Nand Bans Ahírs look down upon the Guálás. The Ahírs came from Muthra, and derive their names from ahi (अहि), the Sanskrit for serpent. They say they had an ancestor called Hír, who used to be on good terms with serpents and snakes, and used to give them milk to drink. The origin of this tribe is not, I believe, known.

E. G. JENKINSON, Deputy Commissioner.

LALLATPUR.

BRAHMANS.—It is not known when the Brahmans first settled in this district, but it is supposed that a sect called Jagjotia came from the eastern regions of Kanauj; they are said to have been descended from the family of Kanauj Brahmans. Raja Jújanat, of Bundelkhand, sent for thirteen Brahmans from Kanauj and settled them in his country, whence this sect had its origin, and took the appellation Jagjotia. These Jagjotias are also known under several names, such as Panday, Dúbai, Súkal, Tewary, Pathak, Chaube, Díabat, Misser, etc. When Rama (the god incarnate among the Hindus) returned to Oudh (Ajodhia), his country, having killed his inveterate foe, Rávana, King of Ceylon (Lanká), his countrymen refused to take gifts from his hands on account of his having slain the said Rávana, a Brahman. Rama in consequence brought some boys from the Muthra School and gave them gifts of lands, and from their descendants the Sonadh sect took its origin. The tribe Bhagaur is descended from the family of Bhirgu Muni (monk) and Gaur. They are scarce in this part of the country. Came from a place of the same name, formerly the capital of Bengal.

BÚNDELÁ.—This tribe has its origin from the Chattrí family, commonly known as Kashesar Gairwara Rajputs. As an endowment from Daibí they, under the name of Búndelá, took possession of this country, and hence from their time this province is termed “Bundelkhand.”

Their customs differing from others, they messed apart and formed a separate sect. They first emigrated from Benares and came and settled at Urcha, and thence their head subdued Barr (a village in Lallatpúr District), and resided there.

AHÍRS.—The exact time of the Ahírs settling in this country is uncertain: it was about 400 or 500 years ago. They are known under several names at different places, such as Kamaria, Nagal, Bhalia, Boyla, Pachlara, Bangnah, Tar, Thanga, Salkhya, Gairwa, Rewrah, Thanik, Khaisar, Nata, Tilwar, Khandelah, Gotaylah, Pattaylah, and others; and all these different sects take their food together.

LODHÍ.—About 300 or 400 years ago this tribe came from the northern climes and settled themselves in these parts. They are said to be the original race.

KACHHÍS.—The original advent of this tribe cannot be traced. This caste consists of four principal sects—viz., Kachhwáha, Salloria, Hardia, and Amwar,—named from the places whence they came.

BANNIAH.—This tribe came to this district from Marwar about 400 or 500 years ago. They are of two sects, viz., Parwar and Banikawal. The former is the more numerous. The Banikawal sect sprung from the Parwars, from whom they separated themselves. The Banikawal race seem to be the illegitimate descendants of the Parwars.

BANDA.

As far as I have been able to discover, it appears tolerably certain that the original inhabitants of the district were the tribes now generally known as Kols, Bhíls, Khonds, and Gonds. By the incursions of other tribes these have been by degrees relegated to the hilly parts of the country, and now are to be found, in this district at least, only in the hills of Parganahs Tirohan, Chibú, and Badausa.

They differ, of course, in almost every respect from the inhabitants of the plains, but are somewhat civilized and engaged in agricultural pursuits. Their way of living is of necessity in general wild in the extreme: from poverty, they go about almost naked, and, though nominally Hindus, yet have not the smallest hesitation in eating any animal or bird they may catch. They very little differ from the other wild tribes of India.

They would seem to have been driven from their homes many centuries ago by the incursions of the warrior tribes of Rujputs, who eventually took full possession of the country, and who now, under various names, form the majority of the proprietors of the soil of this district. Here they are known by the generic name of Rajput Búndelás, or, in common parlance, as simply Thakurs.

Their principal tribes here are the Súrki, Rathor, Tekan, Bilkait, Kachhwáha, Dikhit, with a few Bais Thakurs, etc.

The Rajput Búndelás differ in many important respects from their fellow tribes—men of the Doáb and other parts of northern India. They do not intermarry with them, dress differently, have a different way of shaving their heads, and also do not disdain personally to engage in agricultural pursuits.

In the train of the Rajputs, the tribes now known as Bundelkhandi Brahmans entered and settled in the district.

Like the Rajputs, the Búndelá Brahmans differ considerably from the Brahmans of the Doáb in habits and costumes, as well as in language.

In the parganah of Tirohan there is a considerable number of Mah-rattas, settled there by Omrit Rao, of Púna. They form a community by themselves.

W. R. BURKITT, Officiating Collector.

MIRZAPUR.

TEHSÍLDAR OF HAZÚR TEHSÍL.

Brahmans, Chattrís, Gautams, and Kaseras are the prevalent castes who have settled in this district. Mirzapúr is in the midst of Benares and Allahabad, and is close to Bindachal. As these are places for Hindu worship, the Brahmans, Chattrís, and Gautams have settled in great numbers. The reason of the Kaseras settling in great numbers is that the trade of brass and copper pots, etc., is actively carried on in this district. All the Kaseras here manufacture brass pots, etc., and despatch their articles of commodity to distant stations for sale.

Gautams have sprung up from Misr Brahmans, and Bhurtias from Gújars.

In this tehsildarí there are no other castes except Gautams residing in Talúka Majhwa, and Bhurtias in Tappeh Opraudh, who took their origin from the chief castes. The Gautams were originally Sarwaria Misrs, the most of whom, with a view to show their pomp and splendor on being ilāqadars, commenced smoking húkah, and consequently the rest of their brethren discontinued eating and drinking with them. These Gautams being thus excommunicated, commenced intermarriages with Bhúinhárs, who settled in the eastern districts, and since then this tribe is increasing.

As these Gautams sprung up from Misrs, who had their gotra, or family title, Gautam, they became known by that appellation.

The Bhurtias who inhabited Tappeh Opraudh originally sprung up from Gújars, who were residents of Guzerat. Owing to Guzerat being thickly populated, they abandoned their native place and emigrated to Tappeh Opraudh, of this district, and here they assumed the title of Bhurtias, by which name they are now known, and forsook their primary title, Gújars.

TEHSÍLDAR OF CHUNAR.

Kúnbís have settled within the jurisdiction of this tehsíl in great numbers. It appears they first came from Jainagar and other places in the east, and entered in the service of the Bijaipúr Raja; but when their numbers increased, most of them emigrated here, and became zamíndárs. Among them one Ujaib Singh was a man of great influence, who invited others of his tribe from his native land to settle with him. The Kúnbís are more numerous here; most of them are kashtkars and few as zamíndárs.

Most of the Brahmans who are residing here emigrated from Sarwar; the rest from other localities. Some settled here to earn their livelihood by their own profession, panditai (priesthood), and others to obtain Krishnárapan, and a few others came along with their relations and settled here. Now Brahmans have become very numerous here: most of them hold zamíndarí and kashtkarí tenures.

Of the Bhúinhárs, Gautams, etc., who reside here, some came in search of employment, others settled as zamíndárs and kashtkars, and some came along with their relations from the Benares and Azimgarh Districts.

Chattrís are said to have emigrated from the various localities of the east—some from Garh Chittor, and some from Sausopur, close to Naddí Poshkar, and other places. They came in search of employment, and settled here. Now most of them are kashtkars and zamíndárs.

There are no tribes within the jurisdiction of this tehsíldarí who have in course of time formed themselves into various sub-divisions, and eventually lost their primary castes. Among the Kúnbís there are ramifications, but they are not very numerous. These sub-divisions are quite distinct from the beginning, and have undergone no change except this,—that those who came from Jainagar have commenced ploughing the land with their own hands, and making re-marriages (sagai), which they never did before. The Kúnbís who reside in Jainagar do not eat and drink with those that have settled here. Nothing can be known regarding the origin and position of this tribe; hence it has been concluded that they belong to very low caste. They received promotion in the service of the Setara Rajah, where, having accumulated wealth and possessed ilákas, they reckoned themselves among the high castes.

There are various classes among the Brahmans from the beginning. The real fact regarding them is this,—that the Brahmans are the earliest inhabitants of Kanauj, three of whom at first emigrated into Sarwar; since that time the Sarwars became famous and highly esteemed. From these three sprung up thirteen, which made the total sixteen; and from the latter started up three and a half more, making the aggregate number nineteen and a half, which, by gradually increasing, reached to 125,000 in number—each of which was reckoned a separate clan. The reason of their being divided into numerous sects is this, that each of them assumed his family title from the name of the village he at first settled in, and is consequently known by that name. Most of the Brahmans who emigrated from Sarwar having commenced taking dan (charity), and acting as priests, are permitted to eat and drink and to have inter-marriages with those Brahmans only who follow the same profession here. The Brahmans who are residing in Sarwar abstain from eating and drinking with those settled here.

There are several sub-divisions among the Bhúinhárs. They are the descendants of Ujach Brahmans. In this country the Ujach Brahmans are called Chitpawon. In other countries the Ujach Brahmans are known by different denominations. The Brahmans have gotras, which they have assumed from the Rishis from whom they have sprung up; for instance, Gautambans, who are said to be offsprings of Kithú Misr, who descended from Gautam Ujach Brahman, Kripa Charje family. There is no distinction between them and the other Brahmans besides this,—that the former carry arms and lead a military life, and consequently they have assumed the title of “Singh,” and have forsaken eating with other Brahmans. Owing to their title of “Singh” being celebrated, their original titles of Misr, Gond, Opadhia, etc., have fallen into disuetude. Still up to this day in some places they are known by their old titles.

Chattris also from the beginning have various sub-divisions. Like the Brahmans, they were enumerated into 125,000 sects, which still exist, only their original titles are now changed in some respects.

In Parganah Kariat Síkhar there are numerous Chattris whose ancestors are said to have emigrated from Sausonpur, close to Naddí Poshkar, in the east, in search of employment. They were originally known in their native country by the appellation of Chamargaur. Since they arrived here, owing to their being the former inhabitants of Sausonpur, they are known as Sonepurwar, which has now been abbreviated into Sarwar.

Within the jurisdiction of this tehsíldarí, Brahmans, Chattris, Bhúín-hárs, and Kúnbís are more renowned.

TEHSÍLDAR OF ROBERTSGANGE.

In times of yore, when Balind was reigning over these parts, Kols, Kharwars, Majhwars, and Chamars were the prevalent tribes who settled there, and Brahmans and Kúnbís were very few. Since the Chandels obtained possession of the kingdom, the Sarwaria Brahmans came from Gorakhpúr and Hussainpúr, in the district of Shahabad; and Kúnbís from the latter place and Parganah Bhoelí, of this district, and, being well received by the Chandels, settled here. These classes of men are still found here in great numbers.

In Parganah Singraulí, the Rajas of Singraulí, including their relations, were known as “Kharwars” formerly; but since they ruled over that part of the country they assumed the title of Benbans Chattrí. Those Chandels, Baghails, and Kharwars who emigrated there from other places, owing to their having intermarriages with the Raja of Singraulí, were excommunicated from the castes they originally belonged to, and consequently they have now no connection with them.

TEHSÍLDAR OF KERA MANGRORE.

Ahírs are reckoned among Sudras. They subsist upon milk and curds; they prefer settling close to mountains and valleys, on account of their having ample pasturage there for their large herds of cattle. There are various ramifications in this caste, but here we have only Dhandúr and Gowals.

Kharwars appear to have settled in these mountain tracts from a considerable time. There are various sub-divisions among this caste, which are known as Rajwars, Kharwars, Chero, Manjhís, etc. Some of these sub-divisions think themselves equal, some superior, and some inferior, to the others. Almost all these tribes are found to be upright and honest men. They seem to have sprung up from Níkhad, a primitive race. They are generally of dark complexion; their voice and features are unlike those of other tribes who inhabit these parts.

Chamárs include themselves among the Hindus. There was once among them a man known by the appellation of Raidoss Bhagat, a pious devotee and well-behaved man, and, as he was remarkable for his principles, all the Chamárs take a pride in calling themselves Raidoss, and pretend to be the descendants of that personage, in order to share in the celebrity he had attained. They generally live upon carcasses of animals, and as they deal in leather and skins, which in Hindí are called chamra, they have derived their title of Chamár from their profession.

The Brahmans are said to be the aborigines of Kanauj, from whence a portion of them emigrated to Sirwar and several other places. Among them there are two sects, Ghatkarma and Paikarma, who inhabit the southern districts of India. They procure their livelihood by priesthood, agriculture, and other occupations in this parganah.

Almost all the villages in this parganah are populated by Rajputs. Kúnbís are comparatively fewer here than elsewhere. Most of them have the honorary distinction of Singh affixed to their names, like the Chattrís. Somewhere they are reckoned among Sudras, i.e., lower caste.

Koerís cultivate the land and deal in vegetables. Koerís and Kúnbís are acquainted with the principles of agriculture.

This parganah is very thinly peopled with Kahars and Hajjáms (barbers).

In certain villages and markets Lohars, Barahís, Mochís, Banneahs, etc., are inhabited.

There are two tribes of Gaharwárs here, viz., Hindu and Musulman.

TEHSÍLDAR OF KONRH.

From enquiry it appears that among the high castes Brahmans have settled here in great numbers. It seems that they came and settled here before the reign of Shahábu'd-dín Gorí. As this parganah is in the centre of Benares and Allahabad, and close to Bindachal, which are all notable places for Hindu worship, the Brahmans leaving their native countries—viz., Sarwar, Kanauj, etc.—came and settled here. When the Bhars ruled over this country, they began to treat their subjects with tyranny and oppression, so much so that they forcibly abducted Brahmaní women. One of the oppressed Brahmans went to complain to Raja Ram, a Maunas, who then came from Umargarh, taking his family along with him on a pilgrimage to Allahabad. This said Maunas, on hearing the grievances of the injured Brahman, took his retinue, and, marching vid Sarai Jangau road, came up to Rajpúra, where the Bhars were then residing, and fought a battle with them. After a serious conflict the Maunas' party was victorious, and the Bhars were totally routed. No trace is now found of them in this parganah. The few that still exist are quite unknown; they earn their livelihood by labor, and have now mixed themselves with the Passís.

The Maunases then became owners of the country for a period of 250 years. Subsequently, when Mahárája Balwant Singh obtained possession and governed the country, Chattrís of various sects, such as Baghails, Rajkúmars, Bais, Gaharwárs, Bísains, Nanwogs, etc., in order to have an interview with the Mahárája, and in consideration of the relationships which existed between them and the Maunases, came and settled here. In the Census taken in 1865, Brahmans of all kinds in Parganah Bhadohí were counted 64,469; Chattrís of various sects, 17,119. Among the lower castes, Ahírs were reckoned 34,539; Chamárs, 29,117; Kewots, 14,897. Mahomedans and other castes are very few in the parganah. This parganah is more thickly populated since 150 years, owing to the Mahárāja Balwant Singh granting lands to new settlers, for cultivation and for planting gardens.

The above castes still retain their primary character, and have undergone no change.

There is a sect of Chattrís Maunas styled Bahádurs, who reside in Mauzah Túlápúr, and another sect, said to be the offspring of Hardas, who live in Mauzah Múr and other villages. These differ somewhat in their origin. The tradition extant regarding them is that there was a king known by the name of Jodh Rai among the Maunas, who brought a handsome young Ahírin from Kantit and made her over to one of his dependants, a Bais Chattrí, by whom she had two children, Lalla and Bahadúr, who became very strong and able-bodied men. As they set up a pole in Jodh Rai's tank, which others failed to do, they were rewarded with the honorary distinction of Bahádur for their meritorious achievement.

Now their descendants are allowed to have intermarriages, and to eat and drink with other classes of Chattrís.

This is the story current regarding Hardas, that there was a man known by the name of Pargasroy among the Maunas tribe, who found a newly-born male child in a pond, and brought him home and supported him, and named him Hardas. When he arrived at maturity, he was married by Pargasroy, and joined in his own clan. Now their descendants are celebrated as Maunas, and they have free intercourse and relationship with other sects of Chattrís.

There is a sect of Ditchit Bhúínhárs inhabiting Mauzahs Sudhway, etc. Most of them among this class still retain their primary character, and make intermarriages among their own clan : and some of them following the manners and customs of the Sarwaria Brahmans, have mixed with them.

AJMYR.

Of the Mhairs and Mhairats, the original settlers in the whole of the Mhairwárah tract, and of whom, as being our peculiar and prevalent class, I will give as full an account as possible, we have only the tradition of their Bháts to depend upon. Colonel Hall, who was the first British officer who had any direct dealing with these tribes, took great pains to ascertain the origin of their race from narratives furnished by themselves. All circumstances so elicited have been recorded by the late Commissioner, Colonel Dixon, in his sketch of Mhairwárah, and I cannot do better than give in a condensed form the tradition of these peoples' origin as recorded by that officer in his sketch. He says, "Of the inhabitants of the Magrá or hilly tracts previous to the time from which the present Mhairs date their origin, little seems to be known. It must have been a vast, impenetrable jungle, a refuge for all who had fled from the laws of their country, or had been ejected from castes by their brethren: all these, on seeking the protection of the banditti of the hills were received as brethren. Hence arose the extraordinary melange, dignified by the name of religion, at present professed by the Mhairs and Mhairats. The Chandela Gújars were said to have inhabited the hills in the neighbourhood of the ancient village of Chang, while the caste of Bhátí Rajputs were located in Búrwah, and the hills near Kallinjar, Saroth, and Bhairlan were inhabited by Brahmans. Further to the south-west, Barár and Chetanin, the Todgarh Parganah, were peopled by Dáimahs and Dakal Mínahs.

"The Mhairs claim descent from Pirthíráj Chauhán, who reigned in Ajmír early in the twelfth century; he was brother to Khandai Rao, King of Dehli. These two brothers, with other Indian princes, defeated the Afghan invader, Mahomed Ghorí, at the village of Siraurí, on the banks of the Saraswatí, about eighty miles from Dehli. The Afghan army was completely routed, and he marched out of Hindustan. In two years, however, he returned with a large army, and in a contest the Hindus were defeated. Khandai Rao, King of Dehli, was killed, and Pirthí Ráj taken prisoner and put to death. Mahomed Ghorí, however, placed Pirthí Ráj's son, by name Gola, upon the throne of Ajmír. Pirthí Ráj, while reigning at Ajmír, attacked the city of Bundí, then inhabited by the caste of Harra Rajputs, and carried off a girl of the caste of Asawárí Mínahs, by name Sehdeo, and gave her to his son, Jodh-lakhan, by whom she had two sons, named Anhal and Anup. Jodh-lakhan supposed his partner to have been of pure caste until his two sons were reaching manhood. He one night questioned Sehdeo as to her caste, and, when told she was a Míní, his indignation was great, and he turned Sehdeo with her two sons out of his house. The mother and sons went to Chang, in Mhairwárah, and were received kindly by the Chandela Gújars. For five generations the descendants of Anhal and Anup resided at Chang, and are reported to have eventually exterminated the Gújars.

“In the fifth generation, two brothers were born in the family of Anhal, called Kanha and Kála, and from them arose two great castes of Bar and Chítah. Kanha and Kála, though sole masters of Chang, could find no one willing to marry with their children: their progeny were therefore obliged to intermarry amongst themselves, and soon became numerous and powerful. Kála went to Kalwára, in Mewar, and Kanha remained at Chang, and his male descendants began to marry indiscriminately with any woman opportunity threw in their way. Thus Míni, Bhílní, Dakal Míni, and others became Mhair matrons. The clan of Chítahs flourished, and from the descendants of Kanha sprung the twenty-four clans of Mhairs, comprehended under the general distinguishing title of Chítah; while the progeny of Kála also formed twenty-four septs, under the common denomination of Bar.

“These forty-eight clans of Mhairs originally professed the Hindu religion. A large family of Mhairats profess the Mahomedan religion.

“We have also castes of Motís and Dakal Mhairs. Of their origin, the following tradition is related:—Bhairlan is shown to have originally been inhabited by Brahmans, and this district had been a thoroughfare for Banjars. It is affirmed that a Banjara woman went to the cell of a certain Bairágí, who lived in a cave in a mountain, since called Mokát, where she was delivered of twin boys. She declared Rughdass, the Bairágí, to be their father. He was very indignant, and turned her and her children adrift. She was received and sheltered by a Brahman, where she remained a considerable time. The twin brothers, when old enough, were employed by the Brahman to tend his cows at graze. It is related that these boys killed one or more of the sacred cows. The old Brahman was so enraged that he drove the mother and sons out of the place. In the fifth generation of the progeny of these boys, one Mokát was born, who, having conceived a hatred of the Brahmans of Bhairlan for their treatment of his progenitors, waged war against them, massacred nearly all of them, and himself took the district of Bhairlan. This individual is still much venerated by the Mhairs, and the mountain where the Banjarian brought forth the twin founders of his race was named Mokat, after him. He is worshipped especially by the Motís who still inhabit the Bhairlan district. A Brahman who escaped the above slaughter in Bhairlan fled to the village of Barár, then inhabited by Dakal Mínas. He threw aside his caste, and took a girl of the Míní caste as a wife, from whom have sprung eventually the several clans of Dakal Mhair now extant."

I think there can be little doubt that our Mhairs and Mhairats all originally sprung from Rajputs, who from various causes had to seek shelter in the hills. Even to this day the physique of these men closely resembles that of the Rajputs: they are a tall, stout, handsome, and well-made race of men, quite different to the general race of small hill men, such as the Bhíls, etc.

MAJOR A. G. DAVIDSON, Deputy Commissioner.

ALLAHABAD.

All enquiry shows that the civilization of this district, and its reclamation from the primitive jungle, was of comparatively recent date—that is, within 450 years. Very few of the Mahomedans claim descent from the followers of Shahábu'd-dín; but few Hindus trace back beyond the reign of Jaichand of Kanauj, whose followers, when defeated by Shahábu'd-dín, populated a portion of this district; but almost all state that their ancestors took possession of those jungly tracts which form their present estates within the period I have mentioned.

East of the Ganges and south of the Jumna the aboriginal ruling race were the Bhars. East of the Ganges no trace of them remains: they were swept away by Hindus from Oudh, by Mahomedan hordes from the north-west, and were finally extirpated in an invasion by the King of Jaunpúr. The invaders seized the Bhar forts, and appropriated the adjoining jungle country, which they speedily partially cleared and populated. The limits of these several conquests can be clearly traced in the talúkas existing to this day, and each is mainly inhabited by the direct descendants of the successful invaders.

These have no traditions of further invasion or conquest: they appear to have settled down, and to have remained undisturbed until our times. Perhaps this fact may make their accounts of their remote origin more reliable than they would otherwise appear to be. They escaped those vicissitudes of existence which weaken all family traditions.

North of the Ganges, but little more is heard of the Bhars. There are two reports of the fate of this race—one, that they were almost all cut off by the Jaunpúr invaders; the other, that they fled to the east, and received some territory from the neighbouring chiefs (whoever they were) in the Badhoe parganahs. Several bazaars and villages bear the name of the last and greatest Bhar king, the Raja Lili.

Remains of old Bhar forts and towns are not uncommon in the parganah of Kairagāh, south of the Tonse river. This is a wild jungly country, where the Bhars probably remained undisturbed long after they were expelled from the more civilized tracts. They were finally extirpated or driven from these tracts by the ancestors of the present Manda Rajah. There were Bhars also in the Arial and Barah parganahs, but they were dispossessed by Chattrí Hindus from the northern districts of Hindustan, followers and soldiers of the Mahomedan invaders.

Three influential local castes or clans claim an admixture of Bhar blood. These are the Bharors, Garhors, and Tikaits. The two former are not numerous or influential; they are landed proprietors in the southern portions of this district, and appear to be a connecting link between the higher castes, who are generally landed proprietors, and those inferior castes whose lot is servitude.

The Tikaits are numerous, and possess much influence; they are descended from one of the three Chauhán leaders under a Bhar chieftain.

One of these Chauháns carried off his chief's daughter. The descendants from this mixed alliance are Tikaits, and are still proprietors of a portion of that Bhar chief's possessions.

Their relatives, descended from the other two Chauhán chiefs, without the Bhar cross, are Karaits and Pataits. These are simply Chauháns; the origin of their surname is untraceable.

Of Hindu tribes the higher classes all, without exception, claim their descent from Oudh or the northern provinces of Hindustan. Their emigration to this district was in most instances of comparatively recent date; and the cause of their coming was almost always the same,—they were soldiers or adventurers.

Thákurs, Chauháns, and Chattrís are the generic names which include all the various sub-divisions of these Hindu colonists. These are the warrior castes which in former days composed all native armies. The heads of all these clans commanded their own men in the armies of Hindu invaders, or were refugees from the early Mahomedan conquerors, or, in later days, followers of their fortunes. Each clan seems to have settled in its allotted portion of the conquered country, and the ancient limits of each portion are still pretty accurately defined.

Those who claim consanguinity with the Oudh tribes are naturally to be found in the trans-Ganges parganahs, which formed a portion of the Nawábi territory; those who claim a common ancestry with the Rajputs of Mainpúrí and other tribes in the Upper Doáb districts are to be found in the Doáb parganahs.

The southern parganahs are more sparsely peopled than any other portions of this district; but almost every landed proprietor is of one of the foreign clans or castes, aliens from far-off countries.

The most notable Hindu in the district is the Raja of Manda—a direct descendant of Raja Jaichand, of Kanauj. He is a Chattrí. Raja Jaichand was defeated and killed by Sultan Shahábu'd-dín Ghorí in 1193 A.D. Some of his family and followers fled to these southern districts, and settled in portions of what are now Jaunpúr, Benares, Mirzapúr, and Allahabad. These large possessions have dwindled down to the estates now held in this district alone.

Akin to the Manda Raja is the Raja of Dyah: he is of the Garwar clan, an influential sub-division of the Chattrí caste. I believe this is purely a local clan. These are Chandarbansí Chattrís, or descendants from the moon, in contradistinction from the Súrjábansís, or descendants from the sun. There is rivalry between these two castes, and I believe they have nothing in common. The Súrjábansís and Chandarbansís are as widely known as Hinduism itself.

South of the Jumna is to be found the only colony of Parehar Rajputs. They came from Mainpúrí. They are of that caste who murder their female children; and it is certain they must have adhered to this custom of their clan until a quite recent date. It may be as well to notice here that they have been under constant but unobtrusive supervision for the last twenty-five years; and though they may still at heart cherish their old custom, it is certain they have ceased to practice it, for the recent Census shows that their female children bear a just proportion to their sons.

In their neighbourhood, in the Barah parganah, are some Ban Beis families. The "Beis" proper are Oudh Chattrís. These are of that clan also, and the affix "Ban" is to commemorate the fame of their leader in former days, under whom they exterminated the Bhar and Kol residents of the jungle (ban), and took possession of their villages.

The Baghel clan are represented by the Rajah of Barah. He claims a common descent with the Maharajah of Rewah and the Chief of Kotah, from a Gujrát chief, by name Baghardeo, who, in Sambat 606 or 1,300 years ago, was a pilgrim from Gujerát to the Hindu shrines in Northern India. The pilgrimage, according to tradition, was abandoned by this famous chief, who seized on Kirwí, Banda, and the southern portions of this district, which formed the original possessions of one of his sons, from whom the Barah Raja claims his descent. The name of Baghardeo, and the name of the clan "Baghel," have a common derivation in the legend—that this famous warrior chief was fed when a child on a tigress' milk. It is the notion of a savage to prefer this to the more natural food of an infant; but the whole clan take great pride in this quaint tradition. A Baghel may not marry but with a Baghel, under penalty of excommunication. The most notorious gang of dacoits who for three generations has infested the south of this district are of this clan, and this claim of consanguinity with the Rewah Maharajah has ensured their constant protection in his territories: and certainly the savage nature of the prototype of their race has pervaded the acts of these noted robbers. Each of their feats has shown the extremes of craft, treachery, and the meanest cowardice. When armed and in numbers they have murdered the single and unarmed; they have beaten women and killed children.

In Parganah Meh there is a caste called "Tassaiyah," whose cognomen is susceptible of explanation. They were Chattrís of Etawah; and tradition has it that the founder of this clan was sent by Timúr Shah to take possession of a tract of country from the Bhars: this was done, and the name Tassaiyah is a corruption of "Teg Shahigah," the sword of the King, explanatory alike of the nature of the mission and its originator.

The Chandel is an out-caste Baghel, excommunicated for having intermarried with a Rajput, and having thus disgraced his tribe.

The Brahman caste are few—Misser, Tawarí, Dúbe, Chaube, Sukul,

Pande, and so forth. These came from Kanauj and other noted Hindu cities, either as followers of the fighting castes or by invitation from Hindu chiefs. There is but one family whose prenomen requires notice and explanation. The Chappan Pande are merely the fifty-six (chappan) grandsons of one prolific Brahman in the Karrah parganah.

One numerous and influential clan of Brahman landed proprietors are called Chaudrís. This is generally a title, more than a caste name. They have large possessions on the bank of the Ganges. Their story is that their founder was a saint from Gorakhpúr. In a great strait, a Mahomedan king at Jhúsi required the prayers of all pious men. This Brahman's prayers were considered of such efficacy that he received in reward eighty-four villages, still peopled by his descendants; but their loyalty has departed from them, for they are a generation of rebels.

The Káyaths are numerous in Parganah Karrah. They seem to have been the marked recipients of favor from the Mahomedan emperors. The Kánúngoships of several parganahs, and other possessions, were given to several families of Dehli Káyaths.

There is one family of Káyaths in Karrah who are apostates to Mahomedanism. This was either to obtain or retain a Kánúngoship. The Kánúngoship is gone, but they are still Mahomedans, though they retain the Káyath customs as far as is compatible with their new religion.

There are a few instances of a compulsory conversion from Hinduism to Mahomedanism. In one family the Mahomedan title of Mallik was given to an apostate Tassaiya (Teg Shahigah); the others are called Baghel Mahomedans. The cause of Mallik's conversion was simply imprisonment for non-payment of revenue to Dehli. He never paid, but obtained his freedom by apostacy.

The Baghel Mahomedans are descendants of a Rewah chief, a staunch adherent of Akbar Shah. Akbar Shah, in return for his service, gave the Baghel chief whatever country he could obtain from the Bhars across the Ganges; and the Baghel chief, out of gratitude, apostacised.

G. RICKETTS, Collector.

APPENDIX D.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE.

As the six districts of Dehli, Gurgáon, Karnál, Hissar, Rohtak and Sirsa, which were included in the N. Western Provinces at the period of the publication of the first edition of Elliot's Glossary, have since been transferred to the Panjáb Government, it has been deemed advisable to append to the present work an outline of the later statistics of these divisions, and at the same time to incorporate a summary of the Panjáb returns, many of which have an important bearing upon the questions discussed in these volumes.

I.—TABLE OF POPULATION.

DISTRICT.	1. Square Miles.	2. No. of Masonry Dwell- ings.	3. No. of all other kinds.	4. Sikhs.*	5. Hindus.	6. Mahom- medans.	7. Others.	8. Total.+
Dehli	1,227	59,514	108,876	580	438,886	130,645	36,496	608,850
Gurgáon.....	2,016	35,664	121,111	130	480,307	216,147	20	696,646
Karnál	2,352	39,701	93,897	9,295	356,305	151,723	93,349	610,927
Hissar	3,540	16,928	93,117	1,812	373,937	102,928	5,882	484,681
Rohtak	1,823	22,736	114,812	257	465,536	71,118	536,959
Sirsa	3,116	1,362	41,769	21,525	77,980	82,120	29,125	210,795
Ambala	2,628	29,830	214,172	56,440	689,333	286,874	1,455	1,035,188
Ludianah ...	1,359	13,744	138,190	95,413	219,371	206,603	61,619	583,245
Simla	18	7,830	50	410	24,794	5,175	934	33,995
Jallandhar ...	1,333	25,629	216,948	117,167	318,401	358,427	23	794,764
Hoshiarpur ..	2,086	16,615	191,435	79,413	415,471	317,967	125,917	938,890
Kangra	2,826	442	146,992	1,308	676,893	48,662	35	727,148
Amritsar.....	2,036	49,518	204,018	262,639	191,321	502,348	126,672	1,083,514
Sylkote	1,960	11,240	186,245	50,289	218,771	601,959	132,185	1,005,004
Gúrdaspur ...	1,341	9,391	143,375	39,967	249,813	297,083	68,390	655,362
Lahore	3,624	56,797	144,739	118,360	117,301	468,387	82,054	788,902
Ferozpur	2,692	7,315	112,175	160,487	68,406	245,659	73,767	549,253

* Number of Christians in the six districts : Europeans, 1,023 ; East Indians and other mixed classes, 128 ; Natives, 1,604 ; Total, 2,755. The number of Christians in the whole of the Panjáb is : Europeans, 17,938 ; East Indians, etc., 1,032 ; Natives, 2,940 ; Total, 20,919.

+ Average inhabitants per square mile 224, over a total of 14,074 square miles, of which 8,216 are cultivated, 4,238 culturable, 1,620 unculturable. For the whole of the Panjáb the average

DISTRICT.	1. Square Miles.	2. No. of Masonry Dwell- ings.	3. No. of all other kinds.	4. Sikhs.	5. Hindus.	6. Mahom- medans.	7. Others.	8. Total.
Gujeranwala.	2,657	26,714	131,209	38,911	104,156	357,550	49,858	550,576
Rawal Pindi.	6,216	4,000	71,579	24,355	60,720	621,169	2,815	711,256
Jhīlam	3,910	2,647	110,363	62,976	434,157	3,794	500,988
Gujrāt	1,785	14,588	141,607	20,653	53,174	537,696	4,775	616,347
Shahpur	4,698	12,783	73,766	3,122	53,590	305,507	6,561	368,796
Multan	5,882	18,255	93,539	907	86,989	360,165	22,218	471,509
Jhang	5,712	2,828	72,158	2,994	57,299	270,819	16,899	348,027
Montgomery.	5,577	7,255	65,021	12,216	69,805	277,291	359,437
Mozaffargarh	3,022	5,578	59,557	2,571	36,748	249,865	6,333	295,547
Dera Ismail Khan ... }	7,096	2,141	82,959	1,587	48,756	338,387	5,901	394,864
Dera Ghāzī Khan ... }	2,319	4,255	57,884	1,124	38,467	264,527	4,656	308,840
Bannū	3,150	10	60,627	493	26,222	260,550	240	287,547
Peshawar ...	1,929	4,848	116,608	2,014	27,408	481,447	8,871	523,152
Kohat	2,838	96	28,543	1,837	6,544	136,565	413	145,419
Hazara	3,000	57	74,117	973	18,563	346,112	1,516	367,218 inhabitants per square mile are 184, over a total of 95,768 square miles, of which 32,432 are cultivated, 23,780 culturable, 39,556 unculturable.

District.	Agricul- turists.	Non- Agricul- turists.	Prevailing Languages.*
Dehli	270,338	338,512	Urdu.
Gurgāon	399,332	297,314	Urdu and Hindi.
Karnāl	305,974	304,953	Urdu, corrupted Hindi, Panjabi.
Hissar	351,395	133,286	Urdu, Jalu, Panjabi, Bagari.
Rohtak	315,904	221,055	Urdu.
Sirsa	149,469	61,326	Urdu, Panjabi, Bagari, Bhatti.
Ambala	501,056	534,432	Urdu, Panjabi.
Ludianab	320,633	262,612	Ditto.
Simla	13,466	20,529	Urdu, Pahari.
Jalandhar	407,970	386,794	Urdu, Panjabi.
Hoshairpur	565,983	372,907	Panjabi.
Kangra	521,303	205,845	Urdu, Panjabi, and Labaoli.
Amritsar	417,747	665,767	Panjabi, Urdu, Persian, and Kashmiri.
Sylkot	433,617	571,387	Panjabi and Hindi.
Gurdaspur	371,581	283,781	Panjabi.
Lahore	279,362	509,540	Urdu, Panjabi, English, Kashmiri, Persian.
Ferozpur	340,842	208,411	Panjabi.
Gujeranwala	213,153	337,423	Urdu, Panjabi.
Rawal Pindi	475,976	235,280	{ Urdu, Panjabi, Pushtu, Persian, Kashmiri, English, Gujerati.
Jhīlam	302,874	198,114	Panjabi dialect of Urdu.
Gujrāt	363,664	252,683	Panjabi.
Shahpur	177,781	191,015	English, Urdu, Panjabi.
Multan	196,281	275,120	Urdu, Multani, Panjabi.
Jhang	119,619	228,408	Panjabi.
Montgomery	153,401	206,036	English, Urdu, Panjabi.
Mozaffargarh	205,799	89,748	Panjabi.
Dera Ismail Khān ...	215,933	178,931	Pushtu, Panjabi.
Dera Ghāzī Khān ...	173,420	135,420	Hindustani, Panjabi, Belochi.
Bannū	204,410	83,136	Pushtu, Hindi.
Peshawar	267,736	255,416	Pushtu, Urdu.
Kohat	100,257	45,162	Pushtu, Urdu, Hindi, Persian.
Hazara	267,434	99,784	Panjabi, Hindi, Pushtu.

* From Hazara to Dera Ismail Khān the hill tribes are the Pattīān or Pushtū-speaking race; southwards of Dera Ismail Khān they are Beloch.

II.—STATEMENT OF NATIVE STATES IN FEUDAL SUBORDINATION TO THE PANJÁB GOVERNMENT FOR 1867.

Name of State.	Area in Square Miles.	Estimated Population.	Caste of Ruler.
I.—States under the management of British Officers.
1. Bháwalpúr.....	2,483	364,582	Dandputra.
2. Chamba	3,216	120,000	Rajpnt.
3. Pataoda		6,600	Afghan.
II.—States not under the management of British Officers.
4. Jammu and Kashmír	The area of the Native States in political relation with the Panjáb Government is given approxi- mately at 17,340 square miles; but there are no reliable statistics showing the proportion of this area brought under cultivation or cul- turable.	1,500,000	Rajput.
5. Patiála		1,586,000	Siddhu Jatt.
6. Jind		311,000	Ditto.
7. Nábha		276,000	Ditto.
8. Kalsia		62,000	Jatt.
9. Maler Kotla		46,200	Sheikh.
10. Faríd Kot		51,000	Siddhu Jatt.
11. Dojána		6,300	Afghan.
12. Loháru		18,000	Ditto.
13. Kapurthála		212,721	Ahlwalia.
14. Mandi		139,259	Rajput.
15. Sukít		44,552	Ditto.
16. Sarmúr (Náhan)		75,595	Ditto.
17. Kahlúr (Biláspúr)		66,848	Chandeli Rajput.
18. Hindúr (Nálagurh)		49,678	Rajput.
19. Bussáhir		45,025	Ditto.
20. Keonthal		18,083	Ditto.
21. Bághal		22,305	Ditto.
22. Jubbal		17,262	Ditto.
23. Bhajji		9,001	Ditto.
24. Kumharsain		7,829	Ditto.
25. Kuthár		3,990	Ditto.
26. Dhámi		2,853	Ditto.
27. Baghát	Ditto.
28. Balsan		4,892	Ditto.
29. Mailog		7,358	Ditto.
30. Bija		981	Ditto.
31. Tarooh		3,082	Ditto.
32. Kunhiar		1,906	Ditto.
33. Mangal		917	Ditto.
34. Darkuti		612	Ditto.

LATEST COMPARATIVE CENSUS OF ALL INDIA.

Analysis of the names, races, and creeds of which our subjects are composed. To these should be added the Parsís, 180,000, East Indians or Eurasians, 91,000, and Europeans 156,000, including the army.

There are some 10,000 Jews and 5,000 Armenians in India. The number of Musulmans, 25 millions, is not so large as is popularly supposed :—

	Census.	Number.
SIKHS	1868 ..	1,129,319
MAHOMEDANS :—
Panjáb	1868 ..	9,335,652
North-West Provinces	1865 ..	4,105,206
Central Provinces	1866 ..	237,962
Berar	1867 ..	154,951
Madras	1867 ..	1,502,134
British Burmah	1867 ..	38,601
Mysore (Estimate)	172,255
Kúrg (Estimate)	3,318
Sindh (Old Enumeration)	1,354,781
Bombay, in twelve out of twenty-one districts	779,264
Bombay Island	1864 ..	145,880
Calcutta	1866 ..	113,059
Dakka Division	2,493,174
The rest of Bengal and Bombay, and Oudh (Estimate)	5,400,000
Total	24,936,237

NON-ARYANS :—

Madras (not speaking Tamil, Telugu, Kanarese, nor Malayalam —Dr. Caldwell)	650,000
Central Provinces	1,995,663
South Bengal	4,000,000
North-East Bengal (say)	1,000,000
Karens	402,117
Khyens and Yabangs	61,562
Rest of India (say)	4,000,000
Total	12,099,342

Excluding the feudatory States, the following may be roughly accepted as the relative proportions of creeds and races in India :—

Asiatic Christians	1,100,000
Buddhists	3,000,000
Aborigines or Non-Aryans	12,000,000
Musulmans	25,000,000
Hindus	110,000,000

—Friend of India, March 2nd, 1869, p. 194.

END OF VOL. I.

HERTFORD :
PRINTED BY STEPHEN AUSTIN.

Also by the same Author.

THE HISTORY OF INDIA,

AS TOLD BY ITS OWN HISTORIANS.

THE MUHAMMADAN PERIOD.

EDITED FROM THE POSTHUMOUS PAPERS OF THE LATE

SIR H. M. ELLIOT, K.C.B.,

EAST INDIA COMPANY'S BENGAL CIVIL SERVICE,

BY

PROFESSOR JOHN DOWSON, M.R.A.S.,

STAFF COLLEGE, SANDHURST,

3 Vols. Vol. I. pp. xxxii. 542, cloth. 18s. Vol. II. pp. xii. 580, cloth, 18s.

[Vol. III. in the Press.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"Sir Henry Elliot was one of the most distinguished of the last generation of the civil servants of the old East India Company. By 'last generation' we mean those who came after Elphinstone, and Webbe, and Metcalfe, and Jenkins, and before those who are now the administrators of India. He was born in the year 1808 at 'Pimlico Lodge, Westminster,' which, being interpreted, signifies in 'the midst of large vessels of the kind which Johnson described as 'not a parcel of boilers and vats, but the potentiality of growing rich beyond the dreams of avarice;' and, what is more to the purpose, almost under the shadow of the house in which Richard Heber had heaped together some of the choicest of his treasures. The old folios, on shelves or piled upon the floor, were visible at every window, and we have no doubt the sight of them was more interesting to the future diplomatist, scholar, and antiquary, than that of the paternal barrels and dray horses. He was educated at Winchester and New College, Oxford, and, under a scheme of Charles Wynn's, the friend of Southey, and the then President of the Board of Control, was sent direct to Calcutta, 'the first of the since celebrated list of competition Wallahs.' He arrived there in October, 1828, and soon distinguished himself by general aptitude for his duties no less than by his love for Oriental literature. The rise of such a man was sure to be rapid, and in 1847, when Lord Hardinge was Viceroy, he obtained the great object of a civilian's ambition, the blue ribbon of the Bengal Service, the Secretaryship to the Government of India in the Foreign Department. It was shortly before this period that he had taken up in earnest the task of cataloguing and classifying the early annalists of the Mussulman power; and in the prominent position in which he was now placed he was able to command or to attract the assistance of others, of which he is said to have availed himself to an extent which perhaps he had no opportunity of acknowledging. Parts of his work were shown to his friends at Simla in the beginning of 1847, and in 1849 he published the first volume of the Bibliographical Index to the Historians of Mohammedan India. A year or two afterwards he was compelled to go to sea on account of his health, and he died at the Cape of Good Hope on the 20th of December, 1853, at the early age of 45. But even on his death-bed his mind was busy with his great work—for great it was, whether its extent or its importance is considered—and he printed at Cape Town, for private circulation only, forty copies of an octavo volume of some three hundred pages, which he called Appendix to the Arabs in Sind, Volume III. Part I. of the Historians of India."—Saturday Review.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"But we must close these remarks, which will be of no interest to the general reader. We need hardly say that this new volume of Sir Henry Elliot's Bibliographical Index will find a place in every library that aspires to assist the student of Indian history."—Athenæum.

"Meanwhile a gallant little band of Semitic scholars were holding together and defending their position to the last. The Court of Directors had withdrawn its support from any undertaking extraneous to India Proper. The little band did not feel strong enough to fight on this ground, and accordingly abandoned the Arabic outworks, and entrenched themselves behind the Persian literature of the Mahomedan literature of India. Sir Henry Elliot went on with his labours unmoved. Mr. Thomas, Mr. Hammond, Sir William Muir, and a few others, formed a brilliant group of civilians, who wrung from the Local Government what the distant Court of Directors had refused, and in 1855 the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West sanctioned the collection of Persian MSS. at the public expense. Sixty-seven were landed safely at one haul. The publication of Sir Henry Elliot's papers, under the admirable, although somewhat leisurely, editorship of Mr. Thomas and Professor Dowson, marks a vast stride, and we believe we may look to Mr. Beames, Bengal Civil Service, for another volume at no distant date."—Calcutta Englishman.

"The person who first drew attention to this important subject (Materials for the History of India) was Sir Henry M. Elliot, late Foreign Secretary to the Government of India, and one of the ablest public officers and most accomplished scholars who ever adorned the Indian Civil Service."—Paper read before the Royal Asiatic Society of Great Britain and Ireland, January 20th, 1868, by Major W. NASSAU LEES, LL.D., Ph.D.

